To Colonel Ike Ashburn

There comes a time when all great men must step into a higher niche so that their genius may have the fullest scope. Our loss has become Hous-ton's triumphant gain.

We thank you for the many delightful occasions when your wit and good cheer entertained us. We thank you for your counsel, and advice. Every Aggie appreciates his privilege to bring to you any problem for counsel or sympathy, assured that he could see you whenever necessary. Because of you many a personal problem which threatened to wreck a student's plans has been solved. We thank you for your many intercessions in our behalf whenever necessary. We thank you for your loyal services in the many offices you have held.

We give you our greatest respect, and we wish you the best of luck wherever you go—a true friend and a representative of this school and all that it means. We extend our best wishes. We cannot convey all our appreciation of the service you have given to the college and us. You will never be replaced in our hearts.

So We Busted A Course?

So we busted a course and are making it up this summer, aren't we? Too bad, but sometimes such a minor tragedy happens for the best, for when steadily decreasing grade points end with the resounding thump of "F", it provides an opportunity to sit back and review the factors which might have caused it.

Perhaps we devoted so much time to extra-curricular activities that our schedule became top-heavy, instead of well-balanced. Perhaps we were listless and apathetic. Perhaps we hoped to pass with one last desperate scramble. There can be logical reasons other than "Didn't I tell you that prof. never did like me."

High grades have never been made in one last spurt. They require the persistency of the measles. Let's try studying a little for a change and see what happens. Let's start fighting the first day of summer school to raise that grade point average.

Nothing To Do

Because all Americans dread to be alone and to have nothing to do, one of the first queries one may hear on the campus is "What can we do after school hours?" Naturally, even the most persistent student will want moments of relaxation, so the question is representative for the school.

If you are one of those energetic persons, there are tennis courts for recreation. Here's a chance to show that best girl just how good you are. She would probably be delighted to have you teach her to bowl. You might try ping pong in the "Y", or horse-back riding, or bicycle riding, or baseball, there's dozens of sports to occupy those occasional moments for leisure.

For those who want quieter hours, there's the swimming pool where you can be lazy and cool. Try the Asbury Browsing Room, or the music room, or the newspaper room, or the magazine room. They're all in the library. You might even go so far as to do nothing but loaf.

Next to sleep, the best mental relaxation is to do something foreign to your daily routine. It keeps you from getting in a rut.

Something to Read

By T. F. MAYO
Invitation to the Library

This summer will, we hope, be a convenient occasion for you to spend more time in the College Library than you could in the Long or Rah! Rah! Session.

Drop in some evening and go systematically over the shelves of current magazines (on your right as you enter the building). No matter what your special interest is, I believe that you will find several magazines which specialize in it. Read an article or two, and make a mental note of the magazines that you would like to dip into from month to month. We have noticed in the Library that the excellence of a specialist can be measured to a fair degree of accuracy by his use of the magazines in his field. You are becoming a specialist. Why not form the habit?

The display cases which you see scattered about the building contain our best new books. They are worth watching, for their contents change continually. You will find in them recent books about the war, on both sides of the labor question, about Latin America, on hobbies, on the arts, and, in readable form, about all the sciences.

In the Asbury Browsing Room on the third floor is shelved all of our fiction, including the best novels of recent years. The display cases here hold the books bought, by student request, with the money supplied by the Mothers' Clubs for this purpose. (By the way, if you want us to buy some good new book which does not appear in the card catalogue, drop a signed request in the box in the Entrance Hall. You will get first the book when it arrives.)

Also on the third floor, of course, is the Room, containing a phonograph, a thousand card records, and several hundred books on musicians. The room is free-for-all during your sign up for an hour's private use at night complete operas are there, with the words in translation. Dozens of symphonies, stridets, songs, and concertos are also on tap.

We want you to use the Library, for stern scholastic purposes, but also for joy of pleasure—those of the mind—in the joyment of which you make yourself capable and richer pleasures.

Wentworth, who is internationally recognized as an authority on livestock marketing, has indicated that the course will be of value to many livestock producers and others, as well as graduate and undergraduate work.

Students working their way through college on National Youth Administration jobs generally receive higher than average grades, according to studies of scholarship in several states, made public today by NYA Administrator Aubrey Williams.

Although NYA students made up only 10% of the total enrollment in colleges and universities, they received a much larger percentage of honors and superior grades than non-NYA students, the various studies show. In March, 125,558 college students were employed by NYA and doing their work under the supervision of their school officials.

The animal husbandry department is presenting a special short course in marketing livestock and meats under the guidance of Ed. N. Wentworth, director of the Livestock Bureau of Armour and Company.

NYA Students Rank In Scholarship Honors

Students working their way through college on National Youth Administration jobs generally receive higher than average grades, according to studies of scholarship in several states, made public today by NYA Administrator Aubrey Williams.

Although NYA students made up only 10% of the total enrollment in colleges and universities, they received a much larger percentage of honors and superior grades than non-NYA students, the various studies show. In March, 125,558 college students were employed by NYA and doing their work under the supervision of their school officials.
