Signal Corps Serves As US Army's Nerve Center

By Jack Keith
 Along with the vast expansion of the armed forces of the United States due to the national emergency that exists, particular attention is being paid to the nerve center of the army—the Signal Corps.

Modern methods of warfare have made almost split-second coordination of army units an essential for proper maneuvering in the field. The Signal Corps is meeting these demands by designing new communication equipment and training men for this branch of the service. There is a pressing need for more officers in this expansion program.

Aggies in England
 Three men who graduated from A. & M. last year with reserve commissions in the Signal Corps now representing the U. S. Army in England for observance of communications methods during a war. These men—Pack G. Hines, J. K. Winsor and O. M. Martin—after completing their training at A. & M. last June, served two months with Signal Corps troops, five weeks in additional training at Ft. Monmouth, New Jersey, and are now in England for a period of eight months. The results of their

 Another close game was predicted was Morris-Harvey vs. West Virginia Wesleyan. It was a 7-7 tie.

Boston College took a scrappy St. Anselm 78-0. Tulane should take notice.
 Little Concordia College of Minnesota beat North Dakota State 13-7 while that fine little outfit from St. Thomas, Minnesota bumped North Dakota off 6-0.

The System's record for the week was 81 per cent correct.

 Candidates for the scholarships in the secondary course must hold a private pilot's license obtained through satisfactory completion of the primary course, and must be willing to spend $39 to cover the cost of the physical examination, transportation to and from the airport, and a College registration fee of $10. The scholarships consist of about 45 hours of flight training and 105 hours of ground instruction and have a value of about $900.

These scholarships have been awarded to A. & M. on the basis of the facilities available here for flight training. Civil Aeronautics Administration inspectors and officials have given the College the highest possible rating on its flight and ground equipment and personnel.
 Candidates who can meet the requirements are invited to make immediate application at the department of aeronautical engineering in the old laundry building.

Rifle Team Has 210 Boys at First Meeting

The Rifle team held its first meeting for this year and elected officers Tuesday night. Swish Philgo was elected president and team Captain and Bill Cook was elected secretary and treasurer. The coach of this year's rifle team is Lieut. C. G. Williams of the Engineers.

There were 210 boys present at the meeting and the team will be able to keep but 20. This makes it necessary that some sort of elimination matches be held in order to cut the size of the team.

The various designs of the ornamental grill work on the doors of the Animal Industries Building are facsimiles of famous Texas cattle brands.
