He was later stationed at Schofield Barracks for three years. These barracks are situated about 25 miles from Honolulu.

In speaking of his dealings with the Japanese he states that "They are very cowardly. They are like a small dog who crouches by the way side and attacks with much barking and ado when someone passes but when the passerby kicks at the dog he quickly dodges back into seclusion covering and waiting for another chance to attack."

Further stating he says "They (the Japanese) want to see what you have but don't want you to know what they are doing." Daisa states that Schofield is so situated as to be free from any but an aerial attack as ships shooting high enough to clear the mountain on one side of the station would shoot entirely over the military objective.

While stationed in China the troops stationed there held a shooting match in which the first 57 places went to the American soldiers. They were conceded to be the best marksmen in the world.

"This is a war we must win at any cost! We will have five years of war at least, and it will be long and difficult. It will be a conflict for mastery between two totally unlike races, and we do not want to be the underdogs as there is no possibility for compromise between the winner and the loser."
