"We are presently engaged in expanding our Engineering Department and are interested in securing applications from persons graduating from college with degrees in Mechanical or Aeronautical Engineering. May we request that you canvas your students, in order to determine whether or not any might be interested in employment in this area, doing detail and design drafting of aircraft. In addition to the enclosed applications, we would appreciate, from each student, supplemental data consisting of transcripts of courses, a recent photograph and a sample pencil drawing. Should the applicant have had previous pertinent experience, we would suggest he include a brief but specific description of such experience. half but plans are indefinite at this time.

ly grey theory and prescribed lectures.

Under the picture of the motorized field artillery battery is the statement that the military equipment at the disposal of students at A. & M. is valued at $5,000,000.

Guy Townsend, Houston, who was a sophomore in 3rd Headquarters Field Artillery, is shown jumping an obstacle at last year's horse show held in the spring.

"Marksmanship has been developed to a high degree at A. & M. where, in addition to rifle practice, students learn the thorough care and operation of machine guns as well as how to handle other weapons and devices now employed on the fighting fronts of the world. This is the underline for the picture of the rifle range:

"All school and social life at Texas A. & M., where the sound of live poultry and pigs mingles with roar of whirring machines and the occasional reports of gunfire, is based on military organization and, on the campus or in the many dormitories, a code of strict discipline is maintained at all times.

text department knows how close they are to every Aggie's heart.

Some of the profs are still wearing blinders and continue to announce extra one-hour final exams. The blinders won't let them see that students are burdened to the hilt with work now, and extra quizzes would come as a near death blow.

The blinders also definitely date these instructors. Profs who realize the war is on are willing to meet the situation and forget about additional work under the new plan as the school's leaders want them to do, but these others still believe it's a case of "school-as-Galley 2 usual" and that the equivalent of the regular final is an absolute necessity. So were sulphur and molasses once considered essential, but the twentieth century generations seem to be progressing exceptionally well without grand dad's "favorite" spring tonic.

color that other Aggie games have, as the famous Aggie band will participate. The band will enter the gate as a unit, but after playing the Spirit of Aggie, it will split into two bands—Infantry and Artillery. The Infantry unit will then be the "official" band of the Maroon team and the Artillery band will serve as the White team's band.

Tickets for the game can be obtained by students from the first sergeants of their respective outfits. Also they are on sale in Bryan at Waldrop's, WSD, and Bullock and Sims. Luke's Grocery, Aggie and Lipscomb Pharmacies have the tickets at College Station.

Musical Meanderings

By Murray Evans

Benny Goodman recently recorded four numbers without drums, and they were surprisingly good. The rhythm section consisted of piano, guitar, and bass.

As a matter of fact, drums are taken too much for granted as a band necessity. Actually there are times when trumpets and cymbals clash to produce muddy tones, and the base drum nearly always dampens or kills the harmony. Not many drummers can, or will, play soft enough so that the tone quality of the rhythm can be heard. With fewer drums around, music in general would be far, far better off. Chief grippers against loud drummers who raise the roof with every beat are bassists, guitarists, pianists, and saxophonists.

"Any Bonds Today" rates as the most popular war tune to date. Wonder if any immortals such as "My Buddy" and "Till We Meet Again" will come out of World War II? Harry James' band is excellent on sweet music. His Columbia recording of "You Made Me Love You" is tremendously popular now. James' muted trumpet predominates in his smooth, easy style, and he is ably backed by a fine string section that takes over the second chorus itself with a clever arrangement of the melody.

An up-and-coming number that ought to find a berth on the Hit Parade before many moons is "Having A Lonely Time." Raymond Scott's great band has been shattering attendance records in Boston for the past eight weeks. One of his most welcome features are his informal concerts, given by his small combination, which presents his own interpretative jazz music in the original "Raymond Scott Quintet" manner, the finest example of which can be currently heard from the Columbia record, "On the Jersey Side."
