Dust Elimination Leads Way to More Modern Wood Plastics

Seattle, Wash. (ACP)—A University of Washington professor's dust-elimination invention literally has snatched a valuable wood by-product out of thin air.

Professor Frederick K. Kirsten, school of aeronautical engineering, has disclosed how his application of the principle of centrifugal force to dust-laden air has resulted in a process by which fine wood dust—"wood flour"—can be reclaimed for use in plastics.

The machine takes dust out of the air by setting it in whirling motion at terrific speed. The dust is thrown out by centrifugal force while the clean air is taken off at the center.

He said wood flour sells for about $35 a ton.

Smaller units soon will be in production, he said, for use as dust filters on automobile carburetors.

on obedience to law and regulations and the exercise of command through proper channels. Authority is accompanied by definite responsibility for its proper exercise. Under the direction of the commandant, cadet officers are solely responsible for maintaining discipline and developing military leadership in the cadet corps. Theirs is the responsibility for the instruction of lower classmen in military matters and in dormitory discipline assisted by the non-commissioned officers under their command.

Personal Service Prohibited
3. The rendering of personal service in any form to any upper classmen is contrary to military usage and must be discontinued.

The responsibility of reprimanding cadets for failure to perform their duty is a responsibility of the organization commander and will be carried out by him. No cadet is authorized to administer any form of physical punishment; offenses against regulations warranting punishment will be reported to the Commandant.

4. Except when specifically authorized by the Commandant, only the organization commander may call or conduct any meeting of under classmen in his organization.

5. The Commandant is charged with enforcing these rules and the tactical officers will be directed to make such inspections as are necessary.

Musical Meanderings

By Murray Evans

Pity the poor fellow with the "tin" ear—don't abuse him. "There are those who simply cannot carry a tune in a bucket, who have no sense of pitch or melody whatever. Much like those who are color-blind, they see no visible difference in tone shades. And to the amazement of others this type is usually willing and ready to burst into song with choirs and groups, and still be totally unaware that his is out of harmony with the others and is spoiling the efforts of all concerned.

But there are also "tin-eared" musicians, men who can play every written note before them perfectly, but purely in a mechanical manner. They find it impossible to improvise, (jam, to you) to know when they are in or out of chord, or to recognize good or bad harmony. Such a musician usually finds it difficult to tune his instrument before playing, and usually depends on a "better ear" in the band to decide when his horn is "right." Peculiarly enough, such men usually have a well-developed sense of rhythm.

Harry James' band, after its highly successful recording of "You Made Me Love You," has just waxed another old favorite which bids fair to be just as popular, "Melancholy Baby," James carries 18 men and a vocalist on his payroll, which accounts for the fullness and deep background always noticeable on his records and broadcasts. On "Melancholy Baby" Harry gives out with another able solo performance, backed by a clean-cut, restful string ensemble and a fine trombone section.

Eddie Duchin, while playing at the Waldorf-Astoria, overheard a patron complain of a headache, so Eddie obligingly offered him some advice to relieve it. The fellow, obviously skeptical, looked up the house doctor and was amazed when he gave the same prescription, verbatim, that Eddie had given him. What the man with the headache didn't know was that Duchin studied at the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy and still prides himself on being able to fill prescriptions.

Dr. James A. Ross, Professor of economics at Syracuse university, has been granted a year's leave of absence to serve in the office of price administration in Washington.
