North Gate—Next to A. M. Waldrop's

Do you know why traffic lights turn red?
No, why do they?
Well, you'd turn red too if you had to stop and go in the middle of the street!

The A. & M. professor rapped on his desk and yelled, "Gentlemen, order!"
The entire class shouted: "Beer!"

Jake the Rat was the biggest bootlegger in New York during prohibition. He collected a big wad, and when repeal came through got out of the racket and decided to devote his time toward advancing himself
in social circles.

First, he bought himself a mansion out in Winchester, outfitted it with a retinue of servants, joined a country club, and after pulling a few strings, got his daughter Gertie into one of the swankiest schools in the East.

Things went along fine until the end of the first term. Then he received a telegram:

"Dear Pop. I ain't a virgin anymore."

On the return came a rather scathing reply:

"Dear Gertie: After six months in college and you still say ain't!"
