

Tragedy

Flora met Katrinka at the grocery store. She hadn't seen her friend for a fortnight. Katrinka was alone.

"Hello, Katrinka, where's Wilberforce?"

"Hello, Flora," greeted Katrinka. "Haven't you heard?"

"No."

"Wilberforce and I are divorced."

"But I thought you two were getting along swell. What happened?"

"First promise me that you won't tell a soul."

"You know me, Katrinka, not a word."

"Well, Wilberforce made me wash his back every Saturday night."

"Why, Katrinka, you should be ashamed of yourself. Divorcing Wilberforce just because he made you wash his back. You should have been glad to."

"You don't understand. I was glad to do it. But last Saturday night his back was already washed."

I wish I were a little fish
A-frozen in the ice.
And when the girls went skating by
Um . . . um . . . wouldn't that be nice?

★

The boy and girl stood on the deck,
The girl, her arms about his neck;
The boy was burning, not the deck.

"I hope you are not afraid of bacteria," said the bank teller as he cashed the 2nd Lt.'s pay check with soiled currency.

"Don't worry about bacteria, they couldn't live on my salary."

It has been said that Eve suspected Adam of infidelity, and every night she used to count his ribs to see if he was true to her.

★

He: I had to come clear across the room to see you, so I'm going to kiss you.
She: Gee, I wish you'd been in the next block.
