Will Aggieland Orchestra Appear on Fitch Band Wagon?

At this time there is a movement going on which if the goal is reached will mean much to the corps and Aggieland. This drive is the one which the corps is making to put the Aggieland Orchestra on the Fitch Summer

Aggieland's swing band can be one of thirteen bands which will appear once a week over a nation wide hook-up. There are thirteen regions and from each an orchestra will be chosen to play on the Fitch Company program, which is given each Sunday night.

Many wonder how they can help in putting the Aggieland on the Band Wagon. Simply write a letter to the Band Wagon and 'sell" the orchestra as the best in this region of the country. Elsewhere in the Battalion you will find the address to be used.

The opportunity for the orchestra to appear on such a program depends upon the cadet corps which can put the Aggieland there if each Aggie personally writes a letter. Appearing on the Band Wagon would mean much to the orchestra as a group, but it would also mean something to Aggieland and its 5000 cadets. Let's make sure, Aggies, don't leave it to the other fellow; write today!

Had I read as much as others, I had remained as ignorant as they.—Hobbs.

Radio War News

"Radio fatigue" is a new mental disease forecast editorially by The American Sociological Review published in Washington.

If it develops as a mass affliction of the American radio public, it will be from an excessive listening to emotional broadcasts of war news, and ranting of misguided propagandists who stir up "ephemeral emotion which cannot build tanks, but does disturb digestions and impair mental and physical efficiency.

"The first news of the bombing at Hawaii probably released enough energy,' the editorial stated, "caused enough emotion, to build thousands of tanks and bombers if it could have been directed into proper channels. As it was, it merely produced headaches, stomach-aches, sugar in the urine, loss of sleep and widespread wastage of our most precious national resource—emotional drive. Thus, it damaged morale—for the moment.

"The best way to utilize this increased release of national energy is for people to put more energy into their daily routine and for us speedily to find war-effort jobs for every man, woman and child not otherwise employed. If this is not done, people will 'emote' too much, damage their mental and physical health.'

The manner of presenting the news is perhaps more important than the content. Strident, excited voices damage morale. Calm, factual presentations create confidence. It is much more serious to put rumor and unconfirmed reports on the air than to publish them in a newspaper, the editorial

"The press has a professional tradition that distinguishes clearly between the news and 'allegations' and rumors. In addition, the reader is not hurried, can check and compare, and is not so stimulated by printed words as hearers are by spoken words.'

"Probably no good purpose is served by broadcasting anything from the Axis powers, even including their official communiques," the editorial says. "While we know they are mainly lies or twisted truth, they still confuse, irritate, spread doubt and fear, and rouse pointless rage. All of this uses up the energy and wastes the emotional drive that should go into the war effort. It lessons mo--ACP

The World Turns On

By DR. R. W. STEEN

The recent British disaster in Libya has given rise to a great deal of criticism of the British war effort. Criticism is doubtless justified, and the right to criticize is one of the things for which the Allies are fighting. However, in pointing to the British failures in this war we should not overlook the seemingly insuperable problems Britain has faced and the many contributions she has made to the Allied cause.

"Too little and too late" is a charge which has often been made against the British. It should be remembered, however, that there are reasons for the British acts. Britain was unprepared when the war began. Perhaps she should have been prepared, but Americans have small room for criticism on that score. The fact is she was not prepared. Her industries were suddenly called upon to match the war production of German industries which had been geared to war production several years before. It took a year or two for British industry to adjust itself, and there is no reason to believe that British industry can produce more than German industry can. Perhaps this accounts for a great deal of the "too little."

Britain has sent token forces to fight in various parts of the Empire and has built up a very large army within the British Isles. It is charged that this is foolish, and that the army, or at least much of it, should be sent to fight elsewhere. It should be remembered that Britain can lose Singapore and still fight. She can lose Burma and even India and continue to fight. She can lose the Middle East and continue to fight. But she can't lose the Isles and continue to fight. It is true that Germany has not as yet made an all out attempt to land in Britain, but who can say that such an attempt would not be made if the forces there were weakened. Who can say that Germany did not plan an invasion of Britain last summer? Who can say that she does no tplan one this summer? It is unwise to argue that Britain needs no defense unless one is prepared to say that Britain is safe from attack. Perhaps this explains some more of the "too little." Whatever else is said, we should remember that year after the fall of France when Britain stood alone; when Churchill rallied his people about him and dared the greatest military machine the world had seen to do its worst. Britain accomplished miracles in that year. She did not win the war for the allies, but she kept Germany from winning. She deserves credit for her stand.

At Last! A Good Book about Hitlerland ("Pattern of Conquest", by J. C. Harsch) After plowing through such huge tomes as Berlin Diary in a vain search for a realistic explanation of Hitler's success, the reviewing staff of The Battalion has at last found a book of moderate length which offers something more convincing than (1) Hitler's hypnotic personality, and (2) the natural born cussedness of the whole German nation.

Pattern of Conquest makes it clear that the Nazis, as tough a gang as ever cumbered the long suffering earth, have nevertheless given some excellent things to the German people. The catch is, of course, that they have used these good, socially sound gifts as bribes to induce the Germans to support the one about the them in the most outrageous of enterprises Intelligent and generous provision for children-all children-and a high degree of equality of opportunity in both civilian and military fields, are some of the really fine to start?" ... anyone who is miss- weight.
