Co-op Buying Saves Hauling and Makes For More Exchanges

Pooling orders and working out a two-way haul for exchanging such things as wheat for peaches or feed for syrup may mean better distribution of agricultural commodities and better fed Texans.

C. E. Bowles and Myrtle Murray, specialists of the A. and M. College Extension Service, say co-operative group purchasing offers one of the best ways to get rid of seasonal surpluses and make it easier for people to follow The Texas Food Standard, a simple guide to a good daily diet.

Marketing committees of many county home demonstration councils have pioneered in cooperative buying in Texas. Truckloads of citrus fruit, wheat and pineapple have been ordered, delivered, and distributed among home demonstration club women far from the localities where they are produced.

The specialists add that farmers' cooperatives and other groups can easily pool their members' orders for grain or fruit and eliminate much of the cost and waste which often result from less direct distribution.

Here is one example of this type of cooperation. In the Panhandle, a federation of about 50 local wheat growers' cooperatives has consented to serve as a clearing house for information regarding sources of wheat. And in the West Cross-timbers, a fruit growers' association is prepared to perform the same service for groups wishing to purchase truck loads of peaches.

Waste Fats Turned In to Government Help War Effort

Waste fat homemaker who save in their kitchens for the nation's salvage campaign may one day sink an enemy battleship or help crumble axis fortifications on fronts the world over. Grease makes glycerine, and glycerine makes gunpowder, explains Louise Bryant, specialist in home management for the A. and M. College Extension Service.

Recently the War Production Board arranged with meat dealers to receive some of this waste fat from housewives, and the A. and M. Extension Service will cooperate with state and county salvage committees in helping every rural family in Texas do its part.

The homemakers' part in the campaign is to use grease wisely in cooking and take her surplus fats to her nearest meat dealer or freezer locker plant. She'll receive money—probably five cents per pound. Fat should be strained and poured into clean, wide-mouthed cans, such as a coffee can.

Using fat drippings in preparing food will help in the movement, since it will prevent drawing on commercial stocks of fats and oils. Every tablespoon used means buying less fat.

Some homemakers have mistakenly feared a soap shortage would make it necessary to save their fats for making soap at home. But soap is a by-product of glycerine, Miss Bryant explains, so large supplies will be available.

New Radio Program Stars Neighborly Help to Citizens

With the opening of a new Government program "Neighborhood Call," the Office of War Information inaugurates a series of 15-minute transcribed programs which will be distinctly different from anything you have heard from official sources to date.

Presented by the Office of Price Administration, the new series attacks the problems of the average household, the average housewife, and the average storekeeper in a simple, direct, forceful manner. The program consists of a series of visits by the neighbor who drops in each week by way of the family radio to discuss some of the things that "Dad" and "the Missus" are vitally interested in today—the effects of Price Control and Rent Control and Rationing on the family pocket-book and the neighborhood way of life.

With the aid of dramatic interludes, the neighbor drives home the need for patriotic co-operation on the part of everyone. He does this with homely analogy, quiet philosophy and interesting storytelling. He does not believe in sermonizing and he is as opposed to political spell-binding as he is to tire bootleggers.

You will hear what is being done by the Government in your behalf, what the Government has done to keep down the cost of food and clothing and rent and how the average housewife can help to protect her own pocketbook.

Listening to the Neighbor, you learn the implications of the great economic battle that is being waged to protect you and your neighbor.

"Neighborhood Call" is written by Will McMorrow of the Radio Division, Office of War Information.

requirements, and the general demand. The forester suggests that it is profitable to plant seedlings where desirable species will not reseed satisfactorily by natural methods.

It pays to thin and prune young forest trees where such improvement becomes necessary. Some of the fresh cut saplings removed as thinnings should be treated with a suitable chemical for fence posts. The lowest cost method is using sections of pipe, or other equipment, for the end-flow treatment. This increases the life of non-durable posts 10 to 15 years.

Accounting Society To Hold Watermelon Feed Monday Evening

The Accounting Society will hold a watermelon feed this Monday night at Hensel Park. There will be plenty of watermelon for everyone, and all sophomores, juniors and seniors majoring in accounting are urged to be present.

All members who have a ride may go directly to the park while those who do not have transportation will meet at the northern end of the Agricultural building immediately after supper Monday.

Summer Sickness In Turkeys Cured By Using Simple Drugs

Blackhead is one of the serious problems confronting turkey growers, with poult of one to three or four months old most affected, says W. A. Boney, Jr., poultry veterinarian of the Texas A. & M. College Extension Service. The source of the disease is a one-cell organism which is taken into the body in the fecal worm egg picked up from contaminated soil or food.

The principal symptoms are drooping and decline in feeding, and the death rate soon becomes very high if preventive measures are not adopted. There is no practical treatment available, Dr. Boney says, but regular worming with phenothiazine or tobacco dust has proved beneficial as a preventive.

Phenothiazine powder is given on the basis of one pound to 1,000 birds. It is easily mixed by placing one pound of the drug in 60 pounds of mash and feeding six pounds of the mixture to each 100 birds for two days. Tobacco dust at the rate of two to four percent easily is given for one to two weeks. If possible, move the birds to clean ground and isolate the sick.

Another disease, trichomoniasis, closely resembles blackhead. It also is caused by a one-cell organism picked up directly from soil, water, litter and feed, and affects all ages. Dr. Boney says he has observed more of it this year than any other disease, and losses have been large. The birds show generalized weakness and droopiness when attacked, along with watery, foamy, whitish diarrhea.

Treatment, he adds, is strictly a problem of sanitation. By administering a mixture of two ounces of copper sulphate (bues-ton) in one pint vinegar, and moving the birds if possible, good results can be expected. The mixture should be given in quantities of one tablespoonful to each gallon of drinking water in a non-metal container for four or five days.

A large camp fire is likely to get out of control, while a small one is safer and more satisfactory for cooking. Fires should be built away from trees, logs and grass. Fire in a spot exposed to strong wind is exceedingly dangerous.

Make certain the fire is completely out before leaving. Soak it with water, or cover with sand or earth.

Be sure, when out-of-doors, that matches, cigars, cigarettes and tobacco from pipes are out before tossing them aside. The best method is to stamp them out to prevent a fire from starting.
