4th Stoop Quartermasters, volleyball E Engineers, tennis Infantry Band, swimming A Ordinance, softball

A thrilling softball game between E and D Field Artillery ended in an 11-11 deadlock. Going into the final inning with a two-run lead, the E Fielders suddenly collapsed, and coupled with some wildness on the part of the pitchers let in the tying runs. The bases were still loaded with none down when Red Schaper came in from his first base post to snuff the rally out by whiffing the last three batters. This is the second game between the two teams that has ended in a tie. Another game will, however, be played to determine the winner. Intramural Scores:

Gestapo Hunts in the Sewers of Paris

This is one of the exciting episodes of "Joan of Paris," RKO Radio's highly dramatic and romantic adventure film of life in France under the German occupation. Telling the story of a Parisian girl's love and sacrifice for an RAF flier trapped in enemy territory, the picture stars Michele Morgan in the title role and Paul Henreid as the squadron leader. Seen above are Miss Morgan, Laird Cregar, leader of the Gestapo, and his men on the hunt. The picture plays at the Campus Theatre beginning with the Saturday night preview and playing through Sunday and Monday.

be included in these later shipments are being sought by the "Y". Among the items included in the first shipment are musical instruments, writing and drawing materials, indoor games, recorded educational courses, athletic equipment, religious materials and books. Similar supplies, as well as handicraft materials, theatrical makeup kits, scientific instruments and other items of an educational or recreational nature, are sought for inclusion in later shipments. Musical instruments to be sent aboard the Kanangoora to help cheer American and other Allied prisoners during their leisure hours behind barbed wire include violins, saxophones, trumpets, clarinets, guitars, trombones, accordions and drums, as well as parts and accessories. One hundred portable phonographs and 2,500 records also are included. Writing materials being sent include ink, penholders and points, rulers, erasers, pencils, notebooks, chalks and paper. Drawing supplies are T-squares, triangles, scales, pencils, protractors, tracing paper, scotch, tape, erasers, sketchbooks, water color and oil paints, brushes, mixing cups, canvas and palettes. These materials are used in "prison camp universities," with prisoners as teachers. A variety of indoor games, ranging from chess to jigsaw puzzles and table tennis, is among the cargo, and outdoor athletic supplies include balls and other materials for soccer, basketball, volleyball, softball, baseball, horse-shoes and boxing. Religious materials include items for Protestant, Jewish and Catholic worship, besides 4,450 Bibles and other religious books. A total of 22,490 other books, including language study volumes, textbooks, recreational volumes and works of non-fiction, also is being sent. The War Prisoners' Aid of the World's Alliance of Y. M. C. A.s is an international organization with headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. Its activities on behalf of prisoners of war are carried on through neutral "Y" representatives in belligerent nations. This work on behalf of the recreational, spiritual and educational activities of war captives complements that of the International Red Cross, which looks after the physical requirements—such as food and clothing—of the prisoners of war. This work is done in accordance with the Geneva convention of 1929, a pact signed by all nations now at war except Russia and Japan. The latter nation subsequently agreed to abide by terms of the convention, and it is in accordance with this agreement that work has been instituted among the Americans and other United Nations forces held by the Japanese.

Metalurgists Are Wanted Now In War Program

In the mobilization of manpower for the civilian war service of the Government there is a continuing call for scientifically and technically trained men and women. Among those urgently needed are Metallurgists for work in connection with specific problems in the field of metallurgy—problems connected with some phase of the war program. The Civil Service Commission is recruiting Metallurgists under two new examinations recently announced: Announcement No. 238 for positions paying $2,600 to $5,600 and Announcement No. 254 for junior grade positions paying $2,000. The requirements of the examinations have been modified and college teaching in metallurgy is now accepted as professional experience. For the higher grade positions ($2,600 to $5,600) the requirements now are: completion of a four-year course with major study in metallurgy or closely allied subjects and a minimum of two years of professional experience (which may include college teaching) in metallurgy. Additional experience will be required for the higher grades. For the junior grade positions ($2,000), the requirements are: (1)

Electronic Gages Measure Terrific Pressure on Wings

If you have ever seen a fighter streak across the sky, diving, twisting, and turning with the seeming speed of lightning, you may have wondered how it is possible to build planes that can withstand such terrific strains as those in power dives at speeds greater than 500 miles an hour. Did you ever put your hand out the window of a car going 50 miles an hour? Well, at 500 miles an hour, the wind pressure will not ten times but a hundred times as great, which means that those gleaming American "wings of victory" must have tremendous strength. And the U. S. Army Air Forces must be sure they have that strength. "Electronic tubes and strain gages give that assurance," according to Frazier Hunt, General Electric newscaster. "By attaching strain gages to the proper parts of a wing, and by putting recording instruments in the plane, a few little electronic tubes will write a complete record of the strains during a test flight," he explains. "From these records, the designer knows whether he can reduce weight and thus give more speed to our bombers and fighters. But most important, he knows that American boys can fly American planes with greater safety. And he knows that the science of electronics can provide him with the facts to build planes that really can take it." Stresses in the plane structure are detected by the strain gages, which are mounted on various parts of the plane. These stresses are converted into tiny electrical impulses which are amplified sufficiently by electronic tubes to drive highly sensitive oscillograph galvanometers. By deflecting light beams of an optical system, the galvanometers record the strain gage impulses on a photographic film. Having calibrated this equipment before flight tests, the trace on the film can be converted to either pounds per square inch of load on the plane structure, or by thousandths of an inch deflection.

a $12,000 "personal cage," steam-heated, glass enclosed, air conditioned, with an elegant frieze bearing football player's figures, a weathervane of a gridiron player kicking a goal. Wealth was shared to maintain Mike at several times the cost of feeding housing and educating a freshman. Mike's meals cost $20 to $30 a week. A scholarship student has received $15 a month to look after the 475-pound mascot. Mike has his own trailer for use in football travels. Two planes are now acquired, one at a cost of $20,000 as part of the athletic equipment. They covered the country, seeking football beef on the hoof and bringing it back alive. When school closed for the year, the plane might take a boy home. Nothing was too good for a good L.S.U. letterman. L.S.U. students went on a trip to Europe, at a cost of thousands of dollars. They made band tours about the country. Everything was in high manner, higher with each year that passed. It was revealed that more than 50 per cent of all L.S.U. students were on some kind of payroll—an alltime record for an American college.
