MEANDERINGS

at the Corps Dance Saturday night.

THIRTY-SECOND NOTES The Aggieland sets a precedent Friday by playing an All-Schol dance over at Forty Acres for the Tea Sippers. This will be the first time in the history of either school where an orchestra of one plays a dance at the opposite school. Not band, huh?

Surprise of the year (to the Sophomores) Frances Beasley and her fine (?) orchestra are now playing at the Plantation in big D. This is war.

Recently the Aggieland was given the distinction of being the nations No. 1 collegiate band. To prove this the boys have been asked to come to Dallas Oct. 10 to play the "Show Time" broadcast over WFAA. This broadcast is a weekly show offered every Sunday afternoon over the Texas Quality Network and features a different orchestra each week. Incidentally if the band accepts it will be the first time a college orchestra has played on the show. Strictly on the Q-T is the fact that the boys have also been offered a one night stand at the Plantation. It just goes to show you what using Fitch Hair Oil will do for you.

COAST BALL

Weeks family, and his young son already proficient on trombone and piano, promises to carry on the forth generation. Jack's great great grandfather in Uxbridge, Canada, was a talented musician, composer and arranger. His grandfather, Anson's father, was a singer and choir director.

Margie Little, well known, charming vocalist, will be featured during brief respites of "Dancin' With Anson."

details of the Development Fund Campaign which was initially launched in September. Senior Class President Rocky Sutherland and Junior President Sid Smith have been invited to sit in this meeting in order that through them the student body may be better informed on plans of the Alumni group to be of assistance to the College.

ganization is one of the most versatile bands in the world being not only the largest aggregation of college musicians now in existence, but containing within itself three complete bands. Boys in the Field Artillery unit at A. & M. play in the Field Artillery Band, while boys taking Infantry training are in the Infantry Band. From both bands, about eighty-five boys are taken to make up the Concert Band, which not only plays everything from swing to the classics, but goes on a tour of the Southwest every spring to play before high schools and civic organizations—people who seldom ever get a chance to hear a good college band.

During the spring, try-outs are held for the Concert Band, and following the eliminations, there come many hours of weary blowing and re-blowing in preparation for the long tour taken by the boys during the spring months. All types of music are included in the repertoire of this finest of all musical organizations of the campus. Specializing in the classics and rousing military aires, the band thrills thousands of people all over the Southwest with its impressive and stirring aires.

Each of the two regular units, the Field Artillery and the Infantry, is composed of about 125 members, taken during their freshman year after try-outs before Col. Dunn. These boys live on opposite sides of the Aggie campus, and each plays for meal formations and retreat before the two mess halls. The Aggie corps of 6,000 boys makes such a long procession when on parade down the main streets of Austin, Houston, Ft. Worth or Dallas, that the band must be split up—one unit leading the parade, the other about two thirds of the way to the rear—in order that the boys may hear the drums' cadence in their marching.

Those intricate maneuvers so thoroughly enjoyed by football fans are the results of many hours of tiring practice. Each week, the next Saturdays' formations are figured out by Head Drum Major Ben Schleider of Brenham, and his assistants, Drum Majors Joe Gordon of Homer, Louisiana, and Ed Perry of Palestine.

Every afternoon from 6 until 7 o'clock, they march and play, march and play, forever ironing out the kinks in their maneuvers.

As if an hour a day of hard drilling isn't enough, after supper the band plays for the four-nights weekly yell practice topped off by another hour of regular musical practice under Col. Dunn and Mr. Covington.

On the campus of A. & M., the Band is an all-powerful organization, and many student leaders come from its ranks. Because it does so much more drilling than the ordinary Aggie outfit, the Band is proud of its military efficiency and smartness.
