lasting so it can support the civilization to come. If it is to be secure we must be skilled workmen to fulfill our tasks properly. If we fail to do our part for the lack of skill, we have let down our country, ourselves, and the future generations to come. We must cast ourselves in the category of engineers. We must plan; we must plot. We will have to see and reason what the future has to hold. We must analyze it carefully, and study each part to the last detail. By doing this we can see just what to use in the foundation.

Gentlemen, today is nearly gone; we must work fast, and sure. It is tomorrow for which we must prepare. The foundation of civilization must and will be completed.

—DEDICATION—

open from 12 noon until 2:30 p.m., it was announced.

Opening of the dedication program will be the landing of a P-51 Mustang which will taxi to the speakers' stand and soldiers will stencil on the plane "The Spirit of Bryan Field." W. D. Mills, foreman of the Williams Ranch, will brand the plane with a "T" for Texas. The plane was purchased by the people of Bryan and will be delivered to them through Travis B. Bryan, president of the First National Bank, and H. W. Schwedes. Mr. Bryan was sponsor of the campaign to buy the Mustang. Mr. Bryan in turn will present the plane to the Army Air Forces through Colonel Duckworth.

The Mustang will be christened by Miss Anne Learnard, daughter of Major A. T. Learnard of Bryan Field. The little four-year-old miss will christen the plane with a bottle of Brazos River water, in keeping with the legend that those who partake of Brazos River water will always return, being a good omen since the ship will leave for combat duty as soon as the dedication services are over.

After the christening ceremony, Col. Duckworth will dedicate the field and introduce the main speaker of the event, Brig.-Gen. Luther S. Smith, commanding general of the 33rd Flying Training Wing.

As a grand finale, scores of acular air show in which the P-51 planes from the instrument instructor's school will stage a spectacular air show in which the P-51 may take part before leaving for combat duty.
