

New Methodist Church To Be Built

Shown here is the new A. & M. Methodist church, Student center and Education building, which will be erected at the close of the war.

The church now owns a full block of land, where the new structure will be built. Walter J. Coulter of Bryan, a former student of Texas A. & M., has pioneered in giving $5,000 for an endowment fund for the church and it is expected that other endowment funds will be secured.

Costing about $175,000 the above pictured structure will be of modified Gothic architecture. The sanctuary will seat 875 persons and will be designed for comfort, beauty and worshipfulness. Plans call for an organ and tower chimes.

The Student center will include a large lounge, with piano, radio, victrola, table games, easy chairs, a library, a mother's parlor, where Aggies may entertain their mothers; a student council room; a small chapel; offices for the pastor, assistant pastor, church secretary and the president of the student council; a banquet hall with stage, kitchen and having at one end a projection machine for motion pictures; several large game rooms; a guest room for visiting speakers; a workshop; and a small dormitory room for several boys who will care for the building.

The Educational building will contain facilities for church school classes and assembly rooms.

Rev. Walton B. Gardner is pastor of the church and J. Gordon Gay is treasurer of the building fund.

E. R. Eudaly for our consideration for the important post of director of the co-operative extension service of Texas. In so doing, you not only presented the recommendation of the board of directors of the Texas A. & M. College but also your views in regard to the matter and certain reasons why you were urging his appointment.

"You asked for immediate consideration and a reply at an early date. We have given the matter very careful consideration and have weighed the information which you presented in connection with your recommendation of Eudaly.

the Memorandum of Agreement between the Secretary of Agriculture and the Texas A. & M. College, extension work in agriculture and home economics is carried on co-operatively, and the extension director functions as the joint representative of the Texas A. & M. College and of the United States Department of Agriculture. From the standpoint of the department, he is its representative in co-operative extension matters in the State of Texas.

Requirements Stressed

"In the consideration of candidates for the important position of representing the Department of Agriculture as director of extension, it has been the policy of the department for many years to lay great emphasis on certain requirements.

"Foremost among these is the ability of the nominee to give unified leadership in the state to the extension service and to receive the united support of all farm people and of the public in general of the co-operative extension program. This qualification is particularly important now that we are at war and food plays such an important part in the successful prosecution of the war and in the development of a Democratic peace after the war.

Doesn't Meet Qualifications

"In consideration of the department's agreeing to carry on in co-operation with the A. & M. College of Texas all demonstrations and other forms of extension work in agriculture and home economics which the department is authorized by Congress to conduct in the State of Texas, the A. & M. College of Texas agreed 'to establish and maintain a definite and distinct administrative organization for the management and conduct of the extension work in agriculture and home economics known as the extension service with a responsible leader selected by the college, satisfactory to the Department of Agriculture.'

"Eudaly does not meet the department's qualifications for the position of director of the co-operative extension service of Texas outlined above, and we regret to inform you that we can not recommend his appointment."

In commenting upon Eudaly's failure to be approved, President Gilchrist said:

"From M. L. Wilson, National Director of Extension Work in Washington we have today received a definite refusal to accept the nomination of E. R. Eudaly as Extension Director for Texas. Eudaly's name had been submitted first by the Board of Directors and later by the President. We consider him a very capable man and believe he would make an efficient director. However, Mr. Wilson does not agree and the mutual nature of the contract between the A. & M. College of Texas and the Department of Agriculture gives the latter the right of approval or disapproval."

War II. Type of training academic. Duration of service March 1, 1943 to June 30, 1944. This certificate is awarded at Headquarters Army Air Forces Training Command, Fort Worth, Texas, this first day of July in the year of our Lord, 1944." The certificate bears the signatures of Lt. Gen. B. K. Yount, Commanding General of the Training Command, and General Kraus, Commanding General of the CFTC.

The college training program at the peak of its strength late in 1943, included 54 colleges and universities under the jurisdiction of the AAF Central Flying Training Command. These schools were scattered over 17 states in the Middle and Southwest and 26,000 air crew trainees were numbered in their classes.

"Throughout the college training program Army Air Forces requirements were met with sincerity and unselfish effort on the part of every school in the program," Brig. Gen. Walter F. Kraus, Commanding General of the Central Flying Training Command, has stated.

"It was a stupendous undertaking on very short notice which the colleges and universities undertook. Both college authorities and military personnel are completing the program with a very high degree of respect for each other. Faculties took pride in the courtesy, respect and classroom attention of their air corps students, and townspeople opened their hearts and homes to them."

Terminating after 16 months' service, the college training program got under way in March, 1943. Colleges all over the country were rapidly inspected by commanding officers of AAFTC stations, selections were made and the 54 schools had barely a month in which to prepare for their air crew trainees.

Students streamed from basic training centers to colleges and universities, the first students reporting on March 1, 1943. They were introduced immediately to a rugged 22½ weeks course and a 9-hour day, including such subjects as physics, math, English, history, military training, physical training, medical aid, and civil air regulations. All colleges selected had CAA-WTS flight operators and fledgling pilots received 10 hours of dual flying time during their course.

The first reduction in the college training program was announced in January of this year, with almost half the colleges receiving termination of training notice. In March, the War Department announced the termination of the college training programs, with the last students leaving the campus on June 30.

With elimination of the college training phase, Army Air Forces air crew trainees now proceed direct from basic training units to pre-flight schools, for ten weeks of classroom and drill field work. Prospective pilots receive ten weeks of primary flight training, ten weeks of basic training, and ten weeks of advanced pilot training before receiving their wings. Bom-
