must all learn to do in order that we may make a success of our lives. Charlie feels that the Aeronautical Department is very good now, but that it will be even better after the war when it will have a new building and more and better equipment.

Crabtree, who is president of the Fort Worth A. & M. Club, Y. M. C. A. Cabinet, and also a member of the Singing Cadets, expects to graduate in June of 1945. Upon graduating he would like to do government research work in the field of Aeronautical Engineering.

College Station Ex Awarded Bronze Star

Captain Clarence B. Hewitt of College Station recently was awarded the Bronze Star "for meritorious service in Germany in connection with military operations against the enemy" from Nov. 24, 1944 to March 25, 1945.

Captain Hewitt, formerly of Groesbeck, was a Liberal Arts graduate of the Texas A&M College in 1937. He immediately went with the AAA, then in 1942 entered an officer candidate school. Mrs. Hewitt is the former Ruth Hobson of Cameron, formerly employed with the Athletic Department of the College. Captain Hewitt is in field artillery assigned to the 102nd Infantry Division.

His citation also reads in part: "Even during periods of rapid movement, Captain Hewitt maintained communications and insured that artillery support was furnished whenever needed by assault units. Frequently visiting the front lines, he secured accurate information thereby considerably assisting his unit in the accomplishment of its mission. His untiring energy and devotion to duty reflects great credit upon himself and the military service."

Crabtree feels that there is no other school like A. & M., and there probably never will be. He said that at A. & M. a fellow learns to live and get along with other guys, which is something that we

W. Lamar Fly Is New Editorial Adviser

Newest addition to the staff of the Student Activities office is Lamar Fly, formerly of Houston, who has accepted the position of editorial adviser on student publications, according to an announcement from that office.

A graduate of North Texas State Teachers College, Fly has had an active background in student publications. He was an editorial writer for the student paper at North Texas, later served as editor of The Campus Chat, the weekly newspaper of that institution, and held editorial positions on the college yearbook. He has taught public school at Gonzales and Seguin and done graduate work at the University of Texas in the field of business administration and journalism.

An English major, Fly was considered the "literary" superman at North Texas, writing in several fields outside of journalism. He has continued his writings as a hobby since graduation.

Fly will assist the student editorial staff and plans are now under discussion with the department of English to offer basic courses in journalism beginning, if possible, with the summer session.

A native of Gonzales, Fly is a member of a pioneer Texas family. He is married to the former Melba Morgan, a native of Cuero and has two children.

Bus Lines Moved From Aggieldand Inn

Effective Tuesday, May 1, all buses of the Greyhound and Kerrville Bus Lines no longer will use the Aggieldand Inn on the Texas A. & M. College campus as their official station for College Station. W. H. Holzman, business manager of the college, has announced. He explains that lack of proper waiting room facilities on the campus made it necessary that the college take the action it found necessary.

At the same time it was announced that E. E. Ames, formerly a driver for the Greyhound Lines, has been appointed agent for both Greyhound and Kerrville Bus Lines at College Station and has opened ticket office and waiting room in the first building east of the Student Co-Op Store in the North Gate area, adjacent to the Catholic church.

The change will have no effect on the scheduled stopping points on the campus by the Bryan-College Trucking Co. buses.

trict attorney, insists on telling him all the findings of the police. The tension is built up greater and greater as the story progresses; then, when it has risen almost to the breaking point, the climax is reached, and a very skillful ending is achieved.

Edward G. Robinson as Wanley is such a pathetic little man, so out of place in the intrigue and complexities of his situation that he immediately wins the compassion of the audience. Were it not for this compassion many of his blunders would be humorous; instead they bring more gasps of fear than chuckles.

Joan Bennett plays her role as a woman of questionable character well, and adds a spice of beauty to the picture, while Raymond Massey turns in his usual good performance. The photography is excellent as is the direction by Fritz Lang.

MRS. BARRY

part of her time to lecturing on literature and arts.

In 1891 she was married to Frederick George Barry, representative in Congress from Mississippi, but after his death near the turn of the century, Mrs. Barry resumed her work in the English department at Kidd-Key.

At the request of Dr. W. B. Bizzell, then president, Mrs. Barry came to Texas A. and M. College in 1918 to do some special work. Later she accepted the position of specialist for women's organizations for the A. and M. College Extension Service. After partial retirement some 10 years ago, Mrs. Barry remained in active touch with Extension work as adviser in rural organization.

When she assumed her work at A. and M., Mrs. Barry brought to it a wealth of culture and experience in organization methods. After she had studied the field she saw these needs in home demonstration work: more active support of home demonstration by the large lay organizations of women promoting education and varied forms of social welfare; a more active interest and organized local support by rural women in themselves in counties where home demonstration work was being carried on; development of potential leadership among rural women.

She at first thought this development of leadership might be most readily accomplished by relating rural women to the existing organizations of urban women who had attained civic consciousness. She soon realized that such a plan was a mistake. Out of this experience came the theory of education through organization that underlies all home demonstration organizations: Such organizations must follow the law of natural growth which is from the bottom up and from the inside out. The results should be the development of the membership as individuals, as home makers and parents and as citizens.

In accordance with this, emphasis was placed on organization of local home demonstration clubs in rural communities. When leadership and experience in club procedure and community activity created a desire for wider functioning county home demonstration councils were organized in 1924 and in 1933 the home demonstration clubs organized the Texas Home Demonstration Association.

Mrs. Barry's organization abilities attracted attention of General Federation officers, and she was persuaded to serve as member of the executive committee, the board of directors and to accept several other responsibilities of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

melodrama of a modern bride's search for happiness. The picture stars Lana Turner as a frivolous society girl who finds herself suddenly forced to settle down and make a home for her war-time husband. Left alone much of the time she is tempted to try her attractiveness on other men and almost wrecks her marriage.

Perhaps her greatest contribution was the organization of the Federation's Department of the American Home, which she served as chairman. As a member of the American Home Department she wrote an amendment to the Capper-Ketcham Bill which provided not only increased funds for Extension Service work but in addition provided for a more equitable proportion of agricultural and home demonstration agents in counties benefiting from Extension appropriations. Previously, 75 per cent of the counties in the nation had agricultural agents, and only 25 per cent had county home demonstration agents.
