Man, Your Manners

By I. Sherwood

Freshmen mind your manners. While you are forming first impressions of A. & M., first impressions are being formed of you—and first impressions may be lasting, you know.

You'll hear a lot about discipline here at A. & M.; the young man with nice manners will know what to do about it; he'll have a proper attitude toward discipline even though, up to now, he has been accustomed to a life comparatively free from restraints. The way you will live in your contacts with the school has been pretty much outlined for you by the college. Your life with your fellow students has already been established for you. As an individual, keep your enthusiasm, except as it must be modified to suit the needs and experiences in your school; don't do any crusading.

The ideal combination for you to have is a genuine sense of pride and loyalty in your school and your church. It is important that you get along well with your school and your associates.

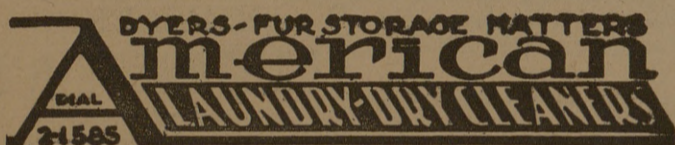

HELLO, AGGIES ---
