

Town Hall Audience Enjoys String Quartet But Wants More Bannerman

By Stan Self

Town Hall presented another of its spring entertainment features in Guion Hall Wednesday night with a joint recital by the Gordon String Quartet, headed by Jacques Gordon, and the charming and skillful young harpist, Lois Bannerman.

A short program, consisting of only six selections and two encores, featured Miss Bannerman's hauntingly ethereal harp playing only once, in Debussy's Danse Sacre and Danse Profane, for harp and string quartet. In the Saint-Saens Fantasia for Violin and Harp, the harp was demonstrated to be every bit as articulate an accompanying instrument as its outgrowth the piano. The fact that Miss Bannerman had such a minor role in the recital prompted many to inquire how she could be brought back again, as the feature attraction.

The string quartet, composed of Jacques Gordon at first violin, Michael Kuttner, second violin, Kras Malno, viola, and Gabor Retjo, cello, did particularly well with Quartet in E minor, by Smetana.

Their interpretation of this emotional work was excellent, especially in the reminiscent and melancholy third movement love scene. However, much of the quartet's tonal quality was swallowed up by the poor acoustical arrangement of Guion Hall.

Nothing could detract from Miss Bannerman's beauty, her graceful and expressive hands, or her consummate skill in producing the twanging but not unpleasant soothing melodies. Also, the audience, predominantly campus families, were greatly impressed by the quartet's admirable interpretation and skillful synchronization.

The program also included Quartet in One Movement, by Schubert, Lonely Shepherd, by the little known English composer Speaight, Scherzo, by Mendelssohn, and two encores, Bach Goes to Town, by Alec Templeton, and the old familiar Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes.
