IT'S ALL DONE WITH CALORIES (via the dipper)

There's been an endless parade of mechanisms to eject ice cream from dippers. But somebody noodled... "Why not make a dipper with no moving parts?" Make it so that calories of heat from the user's hand shoot right down the handle to the cup. Then the ice cream will drop out easily. That called for a material that transfers heat fast. So the dipper was made of Alcoa Aluminum, and the hollow handle filled with liquid. And, by golly, it worked... perfectly. The dipper sells. No "Einstein" at work here... just plain

American ingenuity of the kind graduated every year from our colleges and universities. Imagination plus engineering... or "Imagineering" as we like to call it at Alcoa... did the trick. This is just one example of invention and adaptation of things aluminum... of men with ideas working them out in this versatile metal. Men who do this often draw upon the greatest fund of aluminum knowledge in the world... Alcoa's. ALUMINUM COMPANY OF AMERICA, Gulf Building, Pittsburgh 19, Pennsylvania.
