

Man, Your Manners

By I. Sherwood

Anywhere and Everywhere. You will take your place at the end of a line and wait your turn. You will take no more than your reasonable share of any supplies for general use. When you find a lost article, not your own, you will report it to a suitable authority or turn it in to a lost or found column in the daily news. If the owner cannot be found, it is yours. You will not stand so that you obstruct another's view. When going in and out through a doorway you will allow one who has already opened the door from the opposite to proceed first. A man will step aside to let a girl or woman proceed. You will always say a pleasant "Good Morning!" to all those with whom you come in contact. You will not mar or deface library books or any public property that does not belong to you. You will be considerate of public servants, and officials. You will observe traffic rules and respect laws that were made for your protection.
