without her faith. I have heard a lot of fine things said from the pulpit, but one thing that will always stick is that "Life is not worth living for the little things." Life is pretty difficult at times, and if we are not living for the bigger things, it just isn't worth the effort. Surely one of the bigger things is an abiding faith that inspires us to do worthwhile things that are of service to our fellow man.

The an proving for us our goal it will be lost, perhaps forever?
These are gloomy suggestions, and the Battalion does not believe that things are quite so bad. But it is true that the constant increase of the veterans enrollment, but the normalization of the experiment, but the normalization of the experiment. Such the normalization of the experiment is easential to be re-examined in the light of the huge institution we are becoming.

Whon a corporation grows beyond the size envisioned by its planners, it usually reorganized, not piecemeta as has been done, but scientifically and completely.
The Batt, (knowing that no one will take us serioust and that no state legislature would follow our advice) presents its own plan for reorganization of A. & M.
FIRST there would be created a top-policy group to be known as The Agricultural and Machanical Colleges of the conventional were that the openies of the schools of the top of the schools of the school of a conventional were to the school of the school of a conventional were to the school of the school of a conventional were to the school of th

Newspapers don't identify other persons as former truck drivers, or former factory workers. The present occupation of the person involved in a crime is considered sufficient, if it is used. So, why should former GIs be identified?

The Cincinnati Enquirer, after receiving a letter from a Cincinnati schoolteacher, has adopted the policy of not mentioning that a man is a veteran in crime stories.

It would be more in keeping with good reporting if all the newspapers and all the press associations would follow a like course-Indiana Daily Student.

"Investigate the candidate who ask your suffrage. Find out if they have been trailing with the wrong people, for, after all, there is no better way to judge a man than by the company he keeps . . . The candidate should have had experience in business operation and management and should have a real appreciation of the value of a dollar. Next to integrity, business training is important."

For further emphasis we have bold faced certain points.

The senator is more than right in what he has written in his column. If it can only be put to practice throughout Texas, the state will advance industrially, agriculturally, educationally and politically.
