

It Mustn't Happen Here . . .

Is there something in the nature of a state-supported college that either puts the institution toward the top of the heap, or toward the bottom—some sort of "all or nothing" quality?

The current blacklist of the AAUP puts the finger of censure on four major institutions, of which three are state universities, Texas, Missouri and Tennessee. The only major non-state institution is Pittsburg. Among the "small-fry" listed as censured are quite a number of state teachers colleges. Lack of academic freedom and dismissal of teachers without cause are the charges behind most of the black-listing.

On the other extreme, we find some state universities ranked among the best in the country. California is considered one of the three top universities in the country; with Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin near toward the top. Also rated well up on the list are North Carolina, Penn State, Ohio State, Purdue (the land-grant college of Indiana.)

All of which has little to do with A. & M., except for this thought: This college stands high among the specialized schools to which it is properly compared. But let us never forget that a good school can toboggan from the top to the bottom in a blazing hurry.

It mustn't happen here!

An Overhaul Needed . . .

It is time that the student-government system in use at A. & M. be overhauled.

That is a blunt statement, and needs substantial backing. But the student council itself, meeting this week for the first time during the summer session, went on record as feeling that the present system of student government does not fulfill its responsibilities for several reasons.

1. Recommendations by the student council are seldom acted upon, either positively or negatively. Suggestions made after long conference and much thought usually die quietly as they are being processed "through channels". To veterans that expression "through channels" has a very dismal sound. In the army and navy, many a good idea was quietly lost in that well-known process. An idea that is good should be approved, an idea that is bad should be openly rejected; an idea that is middling should be returned for further consideration.

2. Elections to the student council should be made directly. At present cadets are elected indirectly—that is to say, they are elected to offices in the various outfits or classes and as such sit on the council. At least some of the cadets on the council should be elected directly.

Veterans are appointed to the council by officers of the Ex-Servicemen's Club. This is also a remote way to be represented.

If the members of the council themselves feel that more directly representation is needed, it hardly seems likely that the student body will disagree.

It is hoped that when the council is reactivated Sept. 11 that it will be able to present a plan for future direct elections to the body, which is and should be the top ranking policy-group of A. & M. students.

Look to Look . . .

Following hot on the heels of the first primaries in Texas, next week "Look" magazine will include an article titled "Revolt in Texas". The article in no way endorses Dr. Homer P. Rainey; however, it does tell in a brief and concise way how the movement to limit and restrict the teaching of certain subjects came about in Texas and how it was primarily directed at Texas University.

The article points out to the people of the United States how a group of business men, attorneys and the governor (with no educators included) met and planned the seizure of Texas education.

Not aimed directly at Texas, Look points out that "unless schools are protected from the control of special groups with axes to grind, regimentation can spread throughout the school systems of America."

The fault rests not only with those who carry out such moves but with those of us who permit such moves to be carried out by the public interest boards. This has been one of the main issues of the student body at the university.

One of a series of articles on education in America, the article is not proposed to be a political one but another in attempt to awaken the people of the United States.

Profit . . .

The Batt recently learned and witnessed a very profitable deal of one of the college activities. It isn't big in the sum of dollars and cents but applied to a number of students could increase the trial balance quite a sum.

A veteran student of civil engineering purchased a book from the Exchange store. The purchase was an outright one and not under the G. I. Bill, as he was not a student of the course requiring this text. Delving into the technical pages of the book he decided that he could better digest this advanced work by signing as a visitor in one of the classes. He registered through the dean and the registrar, and the Veteran's Advisor supplied him with a requisition for the same text. Returning to the Exchange Store he was required to sell the original book back to the store at 80 per cent of the original cost and was then given the identical book back as a new copy on the G. I. Bill book slip.

The original cost of the book was $5.50. He received $4.00 on the resale. The exchange store made a profit on the sale of the book first to the student and then to the government, plus the $1.10 difference. This one sale should have paid one salesgirl's salary for a day at least—maybe more. Welcome back veteran!

Tribute is paid today to all present and former members of the AAF on this Army Air Force Day.

Lord Rutherford's Career Told in Fine Biography

By Winora Barton Readers' Adviser

Among the books recently received by the library is a biography of a famous scientist, Lord Rutherford of the Cavendish Laboratory at Cambridge. The biography was written by his long time friend, A. S. Eve, formerly Macdonald Professor of physics at McGill University.

Long known to the world as a pioneer in nuclear physics, his work was not fully appreciated until the light of recent events had shown the extreme daring and value of his untiring labor. Eve has given us a warm and human picture of Rutherford, the man, as well as a true accounting of his work. "He was no remote inaccessible being; the students were his familiars, they were his friends. He encouraged them in their difficulties, he was quick to praise."

The book carries the reader through all the phases of his life from the days in New Zealand through his student days at Cambridge, his triumph and recognition when he received the Nobel Laureate; his work with the nucleus and the atom. Then he was given the Order of Merit and was elected the President of the Royal Society, and he was finally made Lord Rutherford of Nelson.

No student of physics will want to miss this story of the life of a very great man, a man whose boundless faith and constant labor helped to open the doors of physics "to further and more abundant knowledge." The title of this biography typifies the simplicity of style throughout the book. It is called simply "Rutherford."

"ALL FISH PADDLEFEET" IDEA DRAWS FIRE

In regard to your editorial of July 25, 1946 we have a few things to say. We grant you that A&M has grown to such an extent that it is quite difficult to retain the "personal touch."

One reason that most of the students attend this institution is that it is distinctive as to its form of life and its traditions, which we are slowly losing.

You speak in your letter of JTAG and NTAC, and unless we are mistaken, you will find quite a bit of difference between the life of a freshman on this campus, and of one of any other school, although the scholastic classification is the same. We have been told from the time we hit this campus that our fish year would decide whether or not we would be an Aggie or a so-called two-centerer.

You suggest that for the first year freshmen would all be in the Infantry division. We gather from this that the freshmen would be in outfits with no upperclassmen. Certainly this Ros College idea could be carried out without the freshmen moving to all-freshmen outfits. As you know, all the traditions and customs that A&M is built around could never be carried out under this plan.

According to statistics from a preceding Battalion, the Corps was granted room for only 1728. Do you think this is any larger than the Corps of preceding years? From what we have heard, they did ok.

However, we are fairly sure that this plan could never be adopted.

(Signed) Robert M. White, '49; Joe B. Reuss, '49; Robert T. Taylor, '49; Albert G. Metcalf, '49; R. E. Tipton, '48; W. H. Rilatt, '47; Sam A. Nixon, Jr., '47; J. H. Sheldner, '46; Gordon W. Lawson, '49; Joe W. Aysek, '41. (Readers White, et al., are under a misapprehension. The idea, as given in the Battalion editorial last week, was that all freshmen would go into infantry outfits WHICH WOULD BE OFFICERED BY UPPER-CLASSMEN. A more valid objection, which has been made orally, is that such technical outfits as Chem Warfare, Signal Corps, etc., would suffer from lack of freshmen. Ed.)

PARKING AREAS NEEDED IN PROJECT HOUSE AREA

Editor of the Battalion: In the past several weeks there has been an increasing inclination for students living in the Project House Area to park and drive their cars on the lawns in front of their homes. It has begun to cause considerable comment on the part of other students living in the same area and college officials who have declared that the practice must stop or the lawns will be ruined beyond repair. Yet, it should be understood that parking and driving on the lawns has been motivated by the fact that the streets of this area are narrow and rather heavily traveled for a residential section.

It seems that one must either park his car in the street and leave it to the mercy of speeding motorists, or park on the lawns, the latter course being chosen by those who value their cars. If the college would provide garage space or designate parking areas easily accessible to the homes, I am sure that the practice of parking on the lawns would be stopped. You will find that the people in this area are eager to preserve the lawns, if only adequate parking areas would be provided.

T-Shirts Will Be Fashionable At HMSPinafore Performances

Shirt sleeves and "T" shirts will be the height of fashion at the performances "H.M.S. Pinafore" Thursday and Friday of next week. In order to carry out the advertisement of 20% cooler inside, special cooling equipment will be used in the old assembly hall for the two-night run of the Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera.

Principals in the production are Miriam Forman, who will sing the role of Josephine, Captain Corcoran's daughter; Ruth Echols, Buttercup; Bernyce Jensen, Hebe; Lloyd Bailey, Sir Joseph Porter; Harry Doran, Captain Corcoran; Watson Keeney, Ralph Rackstraw; Tom Terrell, Dick Deadey; and Helmut Quirem, Boatswain's Mate. Mrs. Forman received her voice training at the Julliard School of Music and Mrs. Echols at Columbia University. Bailey, Doran, Keeney, and Quirem are members of the Singing Cadets.

The stylized set that will be used for the operetta at A & M be in outfits with no upperclassmen. Certainly this Ros College idea could be carried out without the freshmen moving to all-freshmen outfits. As you know, all the traditions and customs that A&M is built around could never be carried out under this plan.

Today's audience will find the music in H.M.S. Pinafore as charming and brilliant as did the first nighters in London who

S. E. Post Praises A. & M. Help for Harvest Hands

Improved treatment of migratory harvest hands is putting extra dollars into the pockets of Texas farmers and is helping to dispel the distrust that has long existed between Texas and U. S. citizens of Mexican ancestry, according to Lewis Nordyke, author of "Texas Cleans Up a Mess," in last week's (July 27th) Saturday Evening Post.

From 60,000 to 100,000 persons who live in the Rio Grande Valley of Texas, annually follow the harvest from one end of Texas to the other, or into the sugar-beet and vegetable fields in Colorado, Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota and North Dakota. Without the migration of these workers, agriculture in this country couldn't continue at its present production level, Mr. Nordyke says. Yet until war demands for capacity performance in all lines forced a change, the conditions under which these seasonal workers constituted a particularly ugly blot on the record of Texas.

"In 1944, the Extension Service of Texas A. & M. College, as a part of the $7,000,000-a-year, wartime, national farm-labor program, set out to improve working conditions and farmer-worker relations," Mr. Nordyke writes. "Forty-two shelters, or reception centers, as they are called, were located at strategic spots on the labor routes in Texas. Extension service field men guided the workers to places where they were needed most. Meanwhile, local county agricultural agents did missionary work among farmers, villagers and migrants. The program, wholly voluntary on the part of farmers and workers, was based mainly on the simple idea of maximum profits for all concerned. It has been remarkably successful."

If your mind wanders, figure out why—A. & M. Handbook.

Aggies Give Icy Shoulder to Gals On College Campus

At least three attractive and unattached young ladies upon reading "even co-ed schools are short of girls these days" in the July 25 "Batt" declared that being in the minority doesn't help when the men are either too bashful or too busy to ask for dates.

Could it be that the Aggies shed their wolf instinct along with their uniforms or are the single men so accustomed to seeing the cute lil' tomatoes conveyed by two hundred pounds of husband that they are resigned to the fact that the situation is hopeless?

Arturo E. Lujan, holder of a fellowship in sanitary engineering from the Institute on Inter-American Affairs, Caracas, Venezuela, has arrived at Texas A. & M. College to begin a year of graduate work in sanitary engineering.

PENNY'S SERENADE

By W. L. Fenberthy

Recently I read a nice bit of philosophy in a statement that said: "Today's egg is better than tomorrow's chicken." It reminds us of the many times we miss a lot of fine little things in life because we have our eyes on something much bigger.

This fall we will read of many promising football teams being tripped up by an inferior team because they were pointing for a bigger game and failed to give the inferior team much consideration in preparing for their game. We all know of folks who worked hard, deprived themselves of many of the simplest pleasures and saved so that they could have something for that "rainy day," but the rainy day never came and in the meantime they had not learned how to enjoy the simple pleasures of life so found themselves very lonely.

My friend Professor W. L. Hughes contends that we should all take a little vacation each and every day, and then we would never get into a condition where a long vacation would be necessary—I think he has something.

Balance is one of the most important things in life. Surely we should prepare for the future, but we can still do that and yet live well today. Some of the things we will get a big kick out of today will fall flat in a few years. Yes we can have the egg today and the chicken tomorrow—if we learn to keep our life in balance.

Penny consideration in preparing for their game. We all know of folks who

Peniston Plans To Feed 5,200 Next Autumn

J. G. Peniston, superintendent of the dining halls, announces that he is expecting to feed some 5200 students during the regular school semester starting this September. Approximately 1200 cadets and 4000 veterans will make up the student body that will eat in the college mess halls, Sbsa and Duncan.

Mr. Peniston said that his staff of cooks and bakers as well as the table waiters, most of whom will be aggies, will be kept busy trying to serve the best of foods to the Aggies even in these times of hard to get supplies. Dairy and meat products will be served as often as possible until it becomes impracticable to buy them at a price within the reach of the students' pocketbook.

On Other Campuses

TEXAS U.

The university's faculty council has announced inauguration of new regulations governing students on probation. The regulations, approved by the Board of Regents, state in effect that any student displaying continued lack of progress or effort will be forced to withdraw for a period of not less than three semesters.

It was recommended by the council that any student may be placed on probation only once before being required to withdraw. First year students will be required to make at least one C and second year students must make at least two C's.

A new method of scoring will also be put into effect whereby grades of D and F will give the student no grade-points, and A will give three grade-points, a B will give two and a C will give one.
