

Room Rent Increase? . . .

One of life's economic mysteries may be found in the announcement that room rent for the coming semester has been raised. This is merely a small item in a nation-wide inflationary trend, but it deserves some investigation.

During the war years, when student enrollment was at its lowest ebb in many seasons, room rent was raised 100%—from twenty dollars to forty dollars per semester. This was supposed to be a wartime exigency, and reduction was promised as soon as there was a return to normalcy. After the war, student enrollment increased to a decent level, so the Administration reduced rent. Not back to the previous figure, however, but to thirty dollars—a 25% reduction.

After this semester had started, a refund was declared for all those living three in a room. Evidently our landlords awoke to the injustice of charging the same rates for both two in a room, and three in a room. But now that has been revoked, and a new universal increase will go into effect in January.

Try as we might, we couldn't quite figure out why such a raise is adequately justified. Surely payments on the new dorms have not increased. Janitors' salaries haven't risen that much. Dormitory upkeep is pretty much of a fixed cost proposition.

Can it be that the College is attempting to cash in on the present-day pseudo-prosperity by jacking up rents? The American is always more willing to accept changes when reasons motivating them are explained.

Whiz, Bang, Boom! . . .

Crash, bang, whoosh! No, that's not sound effects for the battle of Iwo Jima, or the bombardment of Monte Casino. It's the sound-track for any recent night in the dormitories at A. & M. Christmas is coming, and for many generations past Christmas in the South has meant firecrackers.

But there are now on the campus many men who have been listening to "firecrackers" for the last four Christmas seasons—the kind of firecrackers that are intended to maim or kill—and who are understandably sick of that kind of noise.

The Batt has received a letter from such a one who remarks "I don't like to be a joy killer, nor to cast slurs on anybody's character, but please, won't the gentlemen who ENJOY listening to the sound of simulated gunfire kindly take their firecrackers and such explosives somewhere outside the dormitories? I suffered from combat fatigue, was treated for it, but I'm not well yet. I personally would appreciate it if the lovers of bangbang would quit setting off 18-in TNT crackers in the hallways."

Says the Battalion: Amen!

Aggieland Forever . . .

There are cold words and hot words. There are words that stir you up and words that leave you indifferent. In the English language there are many sets of words, one of which will have all the emotional connotation of poetry, while the other has no more appeal than second-hand chewing gum.

For instance, take the words "Aggieland" and "College Station." Aggieland is a word full of fire, a word of enthusiasm, a word that makes you snap to attention and puts butterflies in your stomach. But the designation "College Station" has little meaning. It brings to mind not the A. & M. College of Texas, but a little railroad station at the West Gate.

Almost every state in the country has a town with a name similar to College Station. Pennsylvania even has two: State College, where Penn State does business, and Collegeville, where Ursinus College functions. But there is only one Aggieland.

The Kerr Bus Co. has taken a step of which we greatly approve, painting the illuminated destination-signs on their buses "Aggieland," rather than College Station. Not only do we approve, but we wish the Southern Pacific, the Missouri Pacific and the United States Post Office could be persuaded to follow that example.

Think how much better news dispatches would look in the Houston Post or Dallas News if the date line read "Aggieland, Dec. 13 . . ." instead of the cold "College Station." Think how much better it would sound on the Sunbeam to have the conductor call out "Aggieland—all out for A. & M. College." Think how much more alluring letters would look, arriving at TSCW, with the cancellation mark boldly proclaiming "Aggieland, 9:00 p.m." Think how it would sound coming over your radio, "Station WTAW, Aggieland, Texas."

Whoop it up, Aggies! "Aggieland Forever!"

Santa's Pack has GIFTS Galore

Special to The Battalion — Far North Correspondent

Remembering his appointment with old Santa, the Battalion correspondent wearily made his way through the snow to the little log cabin which served as Saint Nick's headquarters.

Though his face was numb with cold, our reporter rapped loudly on the door. Saint Nick in his gruff voice, yelled, "Come on in, I have troubles enough now."

Looking up as the heavy oak door creaked on its hinges, Santa's face turned a livid red as he recognized his visitor.

Santa rushed to the door. Waving his arms madly, he said, "Get out of my sight immediately. You have betrayed my secrets. Who gave you authority to tell all the world about my plans?"

Our correspondent assured Santa that he had nothing to do with telling the world of his secrets. He blamed it all on the Battalion staff and assured Santa that he would never associate with that group again.

Saint Nick, in his usual fashion, started talking gifts again. "I like to see gifts go where they will do the most good," he chuckled. "To Battalion Associate Editor Charles Murray goes the legal power to hold mascot elections any time he pleases."

"My sympathies go out to Harry Boyer who has housing problems galore. Heaven help him when he starts moving veterans and their families out of Hart and Walton. I reckon I will send him some strong arm men to keep him from being murdered in that fiasco. I have trouble bossing my wife around and I don't get to give many orders. When he starts ordering that many women around tempers are bound to flare."

"Many of my Aggie land friends seemed very much perturbed about the conversation-making ability of their yell leaders. I am sending each of the five yell leaders a Joe Miller joke book."

"One of my recent letters came from a man who signed his name as 'The Senator.' He wanted some big name bands. I think he intends going to New York City to run for office. Frankly, I believe he is wrong in thinking that orchestra players will cast their vote for him. I later found that man was Joe Skiles."

"A house divided against itself cannot stand.' Before you can divide, you must first have a house. To Sid Smith, president of the Veterans' Club, I will bring members. Reports reaching me say that memberships in that club are about as popular as a skunk at a singing convention."

"I won't tolerate waste in any form. The west is widely noted for its great rodeos, and I hate to hear of all those roaches in Casey's going to waste. Think of all the entertainment they might furnish if placed in a rodeo arena. Brides and saddles it will be."

With that much info with which Santa had supplied the Far North Correspondent, he was on his way back to Aggieland.

Facts Concerning Hospital and Equipment Clarified by Group

This week the Hospital Committee made an investigation of the college hospital. The committee is a part of the student government set up at the beginning of the semester under the direction of the dean of men. Members of the group are G. B. Wilcox, Dr. J. E. Marsh, J. W. Rollins, Col. C. S. Meloy, and W. L. Penberthy representing the faculty and staff; E. D. Ord, E. A. Gordon, and H. E. Robards, veteran students; and Tommy John, Don Farrell, and Jim O'Connell military students.

Certain facts concerning the equipment, staff, procedure, and regulation of the hospital were learned in order that the group will be able to understand the problems of this institution to which they are authorized to make recommendations. Also included in the program of the committee is its cooperation with the hospital staff in devising operational procedure and in establishing logical policies.

According to the findings of the committee, the hospital has a capacity of 150 beds and a staff composed of two full-time doctors, eleven nurses, a superintendent nurse, and two technicians. Meals for the patient are prepared by the hospital staff under the direction of a dietician.

In return for the hospital fee assessed as part of the fiscal payment, a student is entitled to the following medical services: treatment and hospitalization for all minor illnesses and injuries; first aid, laboratory tests, and physiotherapy treatments; examination and diagnosis; treatment and hospitalization for major illnesses and injuries without additional cost except a major operation and extra medicine; examination and minor treatment for the eyes, nose, and throat; dental X-ray, examination and minor treatment; and the furnishing of unit commanders, house mothers, and individuals with medical supplies on request.

Several administrative regulations are in effect at the infirmary

HOUSTON REPLIES

(Below is reprinted a copy of a letter from E. D. Kilman, Editor of the Houston Post, to Lee W. Thompson, Jr., in answer to a recent manuscript which Thompson sent to the Post.—Ed.)

Dear Mr. Thompson: Your letter to The Post regarding the alleged ostracizing of Rice girls for having dates with Aggies is interesting.

However, you misrepresented the fact in one of your observations—insofar as it applies to The Post—on a subject on which I happen to be informed, and I am wondering whether your other statements on matters on which I am not well informed are equally erroneous.

You said: "The newspapers of Houston seem to form their editorial policies around the fact that every reader of Houston newspapers is a 100% died-in-the-wool Rice fan whenever a controversy or football game involving Rice is treated." I have had charge of the Post editorial page for four years—which probably is longer than you have been interested in the subject—and to my knowledge this paper has never taken an editorial position or formed an editorial policy in any controversy involving a Rice-Aggie football game. If you think you can find any instance where it has, during the period I mention, I will make you an attractive proposition to cite it.

Furthermore, while I can not say this positively, I think The Post has had about as many editorials favorable to A.&M. as to Rice Institute during the past four years. You might have to spot me one or two or three on this, but I can recall having written numerous editorials complimentary to A.&M., as you can confirm by asking my good friend Dr. Gibb Gilchrist or Dr. T. O. Walton, his predecessor. I say this as one who personally roots for Texas in football games, against Rice or A.&M., because my only child went there. I would have been proud of the opportunity to make either of the three schools my alma mater, but didn't have it.

I share with you the desire that relations between Rice and A.&M. improve; but just now I am considerably disturbed by reports which have come to me of grave injuries done to A.&M. freshmen by hazers. And since you are concerned for the welfare of A.&M., I would be glad to have such information as you can give me on this subject, in connection with an inquiry I am making into the subject.

Sincerely,
E. D. Kilman,
Editor.
