Winners of Plant Design Contest to Get Trip to Meet

Chemical engineering students at Texas A&M College will have an added incentive for entering the annual plant design problem contest of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers this spring, for two of them are sure to be rewarded.

Authors of the two best local solutions to the problem, which is submitted on a national scale and requires a great deal of research and ingenuity, will have their solutions entered in the grand competition and, in addition, will receive expense-paid trips to the AICHe annual convention, to be held May 15 in St. Louis.

Funds to send the winners to St. Louis have been secured by the local student chapter of the AICHe, it was announced by Dr. W. D. Harris, chapter counselor, partly through a generous contribution by Prof. C. G. Kirkbride of the chemical engineering staff.

The contest begins in mid-April, Harris said, and ends May 12. The local winners will be adjudged by the Texas A&M chemical engineering faculty. Winners in the national competition will be announced by the AICHe some time in June.

The pair of Aggies winning the trips to St. Louis will serve as official delegates of the Texas A&M student chapter to the student convention, held concurrently with the AICHe national meeting.

Quality, Quantity Of Products Topics Of Poultry Council

Having trouble increasing your egg production, or getting a better quality chicken? If you are, these problems will be discussed at the State Poultry Council meeting to be held at Texas A & M College March 27.

Members of all phases of the poultry industry will meet to present the different problems in their respective field. In a past meeting of the council, it was decided to organize for betterment of the entire industry through group action. By bringing the problems of each field into a group for discussion, a coordinated plan could be developed for improving the poultry industry of Texas, the organizers believe.

Objectives for 1947 for the council are: Improvement of better grades of eggs and quality poultry, more efficiency in production, and better merchandising.

Adoption of a constitution and future plans of the organization will also be discussed at the meeting.
