

'Many Positions Open To Men in Range Management'

By E. J. Pickens
 "Many positions are open to men trained in the field of range management," said Dr. O. E. Sperry, professor in the range and forestry department, in a talk to the Range and Forestry Club Monday night, April 14.

"Federal agencies such as the Soil Conservation Service, Forest Service and the Grazing Service as well as the Extension Service, Experiment Station and other state agencies are badly in need of range managers. It is our desire to train men qualified to fill these positions, but of primary importance is the training of men so that they may return to the ranching business themselves and put into practice the knowledge they have acquired," Dr. Sperry said.

Professor R. R. Rhodes announced that summer employment was available with the Forest Service doing white pine blister control work in Montana and Idaho. Interested parties may contact Mr. Rhodes at the range and forestry department.

Plans for Agriculture-Engineering Day exhibits were made. Displays of poisonous plants and important grasses along with a talk, illustrated with colored slides are
