IVAN COMES THROUGH
Taos Canyon, New Mexico
About June 15th

Dear Neurotics:

Sure, and 'tis awfully sorry I am that my promised mad mouthings arrive so late, but circumstances beyond our control, etc. . . The labors of Hercules were so much child's play in comparison to what has been my lot thus far this summer. Wild creatures inhabited our cabin all winter, and I've been busy with shovel and disinfectant. Nauseating!

On top of that (and quite a pile of that it is, too), I have found that man cannot live by bread alone—he must have eggs, bacon, Bisquick, caviar, and chili. Consequently I had to secure gainful employment, the proceeds of which support me in the manner to which I am accustomed.

There is ample material here for many, many articles, but getting the story of something so utterly alien and far removed over in a coherent manner is not exactly simple. However, as you know, I am a conscientious sort and will not rest till my duty is done! The "things" will come in spasmodically; you will have to edit them and rewrite them to suit your taste. It is now 10:10 p. m., and I feel that I'm sacrificing perfect sleep for you. Are you appreciative?

Keep you collective chins up. You are in the luxurious lap of luxury.

Rovingly yours,
IVAN YANTIS

(Ed. Note: The Battalion has been waiting with open arms for word from our roving correspondent, Ivan Yantis. Now we know—he is in Taos Canyon, New Mexico.)
