New York Offers Internships In Public Administration

New York State is offering a program of internship training in public administration for young men and women. The training will be composed of actual employment in different State departments, supplemented by formal supervision of the interns and regular seminar meetings. Appointments will be for a period of one year. It is hoped that the interns will elect to remain in State service by securing some permanent position.

Certain intern assignments permitting rotation of training and supervision in different State departments may be available. Other intern assignments will be made for specific work in one department only. The New York State Civil Service Commission will be in charge of the intern program.

New York University and Syracuse University have combined to offer graduate courses in public administration in Albany commencing in the fall of 1947. This program of graduate study is separate from the State program but does offer to interns the opportunity to do further graduate university work.

Candidates for the internships must have completed a bachelor's degree in a recognized college or university. In the selection of the interns, preference will be given to those who have specialized in government or public administration generally or in special fields of governmental services and to those who have completed graduate work. Such preference will not be used to rule out candidates who have only a bachelor's degree but who have exceptionally good records.

Stipends will be offered at $2000 and upwards depending upon the nature of the training program which the intern undertakes.

Applications should include personal data, experience record, and an official transcript of a candidate's academic and experience record, and should be filed with Charles L. Campbell, New York State Civil Service Commission, State Office Building, Albany, New York.

Heat Is Nothing New; Relief Finally in Sight

By J. T. Miller

A more prominent member of the college set was seen recently promenading about the A. & M. campus attired in shorts. His knobby knees peered out like two barbells. However, his mode of dress provoked much comment among members of the student body clad in ordinary garb. Many of the remarks indicated that perhaps now is the time for the male animal to throw off the yoke which has burdened men of all ages each summer for centuries.

The first recorded movement for the liberation of mankind's latent desire to have what women have always possessed—that is, the right to dress comfortably—occurred in the year 10,000 B. C., when a Neanderthal man punched the spots from his peopled skin, thus founding the science of air-conditioning. The following winter, however, that primitive character was forced to revert back to more conservative dress. His undeveloped mind promptly forgot the improvement; the following summer saw no turning back to the holy garments.

Centuries passed . . . still no relief from the summer heat. Man continued to pile on more and more garments. Women continued to shed their clothing much like ducks shed water. In 1565, a bold and hardy Dutchman named Abdul Repplepple declared his independence from clothing of any size, shape, or form. His appearance on the streets of Rotterdam produced confusion and consternation among the inhabitants. The police hauled his hapless carcass to the local Bastille, for complete nudity was frowned upon in those days.

The years passed. The age of powdered wigs demanded all types of frills and unnecessary articles of clothing on the perfectly groomed male. No progress was made towards relieving homo sapiens of stuffy accouterments. The Victorian Age's prudishness and epicurism prevented any public exhibition for lighter and cooler clothing.

However, now is the time for all Aggies to join this daring innovator in his fight for comfortable wearing apparel. Men and co-eds (all 66 of you), join in the crusade for sensible garb! All ye true believers don the habilliment of independence!

50 Mexico Farmers Will Visit Campus

More than 50 farmers from Mexico will be guests of the college July 24. Dr. Ide P. Trotter, director of the Extension Service, announced today. They will spend the day studying research methods in livestock and field crops.

The visit will be a high spot in a seven-day tour of south, central, and north Texas sponsored by the National Confederation of Small Land Owners, an organization similar to farm-organizations in the United States. The farmers were selected from several of the states of Mexico.

The tour is the first in a proposed semi-annual series to southern and western states for the purpose of observing and adapting to Mexican farming improved agricultural practices on American farms and ranches, as well as the research conducted in Experiment stations of land-grant colleges.

The visitors will witness a display of horses, beef cattle, and swine in the Animal Husbandry Pavilion. College specialists will talk to the farmers on the importance of scientific cattle breeding in Texas. Later the group will visit the college farm on the Brass Bottoms.

Latin-American students are invited to contact members of the party either at the Y.M.C.A. at 8:30 a.m. on July 24, or at the Animal Husbandry Pavilion between 9 and 12:30.
