seller's psychology.

This class, under the supervision of S. C. McCutchans, had spent considerable time in studying the principles of marketing as well as plenty of time designing and remodeling hypothetical buildings, and needed an actual building situation to round out their studies, J. S. Caldwell, Bryan jeweler, heard of this class and invited the group to his store for an interview.

It developed that he was planning a complete renovation of his store inside and out. He outlined the main items that would require alteration which included: new fac-ades on each end of the store giv-"open" look, interior decorations, new fixtures and equipment, a better system of lighting, a better system of dis-plays with flow of traffic improvd, and lowering the ceilings.

Caldwell asked the students to submit individual plans covering the expected remodeling using as much of the old building as they could. In order to spur the stuthe best three plans presented. He will serve as the judge

Though most of the students have said that their "brain child" will call for mild changes in general construction and minute changes in floor arrangement, a few intimated with bared teeth that they might advocate bull-dozing the entire building out and starting anew from Mother Earth.

This work will be the crystallization of an intensive study by the class. In this study, they found that 70% of all people will automatically go to the right when they enter a building. The best method, they found, of preventing this is a place a display counter. this is to place a display counter off-set to the right immediately in front of the entrance.
