Range Managing Classes Visit Edwards Plateau

Sixty-seven students, mostly senior animal husbandry majors, in Range Management 401 spent either Thursday or Friday studying range conditions in the Edwards Plateau. The Thursday class of twenty-nine men was supervised by David G. Wilson and Robert R. Rhodes, while the thirty-eight men from the Friday section made the trip under the supervision of Harold P. Heady and Robert R. Rhodes.

The first stop was about five miles southwest of Austin where severe grazing had resulted in complete elimination of desirable grasses from the plant cover. In fact, the grazing was so heavy that the livestock were eating bark from some of the trees.

Several steps were made between Austin and Llano to study the effects of overgrazing and to see the different types of grazing by cattle, sheep, and goats. Several vegetational types were seen but few of them indicated proper use or good range production.

Many examples of different types of brush eradication were observed. In one area where cedar had been cut twelve years previously, many desirable grasses were found. Nearly an eight-month old cutting of cedar contained scattered individuals of good grass species. With proper care in the future, this area will become a high class range area. Other methods of brush eradication seen included bulldozing and killing mesquite trees with kerosene.

Members of the board who attended the meeting were: W. H. Holzmann, who presided, F. W. Hensel, Ernest Langford, J. C. Miller, W. L. Penberthy, J. J. Woolket, Scott Hood, Jennings Thompson, Thomas O'Dwyer, and W. H. Beardley.

Birdwell welcomes any constructive criticism of the store or any suggestions as to ways of improving the services to students.

New Play Is Melodrama Plus

By FERD ENGLISH
Old fashioned "meller drammer," converted into hilarious comedy is the idea behind "Pure as the Driven Snow" or "A Working Girl's Secret," by Paul Loomis. The author has done a good job of lampooning the "good old days" of the theatre, because "Pure as the Driven Snow" is about as funny a show as you'll ever see.

The plight of the virtuous heroine in her flight from the black-mustached villain provides a laugh a minute, and the slow thinking hero is a show in himself.

The audience will find it great fun to hiss the villain, and cheer the hero while they are doubled up with laughter. Treat yourself and your friends to some fine and funny entertainment. Curtain rises at the Assembly Hall November 18.

Wedding a Week Away, Yantis Prepares to Land in England

By IVAN YANTIS
Battalion Correspondent

(En route to London to cover the wedding)

AT SEA, ABOARD S.S. ALBATROSS VICTORY (By Special Wireline), Nov. 13—June has traditionally been the month of brides, and quite a bit of bitterness has been welling up in the heart of this correspondent at Elizabeth's haste which sets her wedding in November.

It's not that I expect young love to be restrained and possessing the care of age, but November is one abominable month for an ocean voyage. It's so cold on deck that I have to wear long-handled to maintain my position at the rail.

Getting a cabin on this mud-scow was a mistake. I have felt ground swells from the English channel ever since leaving Houston and have kept a constant vigil on the portside, doing just what the ship does, heave and toss.

A week from today is the wedding, the purpose of this junket. Tomorrow we slide into Southampton, where I will again put my feet on terra firma, and the firm the better. If the ocean shows prospect of being as rough on the return trip, I think I will just stay here.

A lesson in genealogy is in order before November 20 to acquaint the reading public with what is happening. And since those who can't read won't care much, we will proceed.

Elizabeth is the daughter of George VI, who is the son of George V, who was the son of Edward VII, who was the son of Victoria, who was the daughter of William IV, who was the brother of George III, who was the son of George II, who was the son of George I, who was the great-grandson of James I, and this can go all the way back to Alfred the Great. Anyone who is really interested can look it up in the library.

I have seen so many picture shows about England, all with the people madly scurrying around on bicycles, that I have wired ahead and reserved a two-wheeler for my trip up to London. Come socialism or high water, I intend to fulfill my boyhood dream.

Heinen Stresses Dependency Of Management on Accounting

By H. W. SPENCER

"Constructive Management Service Rendered by Public Accountants" was discussed at a joint meeting of the Business and Accounting Societies Tuesday evening. Edwin Heinen, Certified Public Accountant and System Manager for the firm of Ernst & Ernst in Texas, Louisiana, and Mississippi, was principal speaker.

Ordinarily accounting is considered to be related only to the internal records of business. Heinen's discussion altered and broadened this concept to no little degree. The accountant enters into the picture of a prospective business practically on the heels of the conception of the idea of a new venture. Subsequent to a market survey designed to determine the potential viability of a new product the public accountant is valuable in financing, organizing, and constructing the plant of the new venture.

The accountant's broad experience and relationship with business place him in a position to furnish valuable information as to the amount, type, and source of capital necessary to give impetus to the embryonic business concern.

Each business is an individual, Heinen said. In the organization of a new business, the key executive positions, the duties entailed therein, and clear-cut lines of authority must be well-defined and established.

Although the task of the construction of a plant is essentially that of the architect and engineer, they should work hand in hand with the accountant, according to Heinen, especially during periods of increasing costs. The industrial engineer will find the accountant a handyman to have around in the layout and installation of plant equipment and machinery.

According to Heinen, management should seek the aid of the accountant in organizing the personnel department to determine the size of the labor force, source of labor, number of shifts, and training necessary to produce sufficient units of the product.

Production requires the attention of both the engineer and the accountant. The planning of inventories as to size and turnover in relation to the amount of financing available is of vital importance to operation of the business.
