

ELECTION INVESTIGATOR TO CHECK SENATE RACE

WASHINGTON, Oct. 22 (AP)—A Senate election investigator has been sent to Texas to check returns by which Rep. Lyndon Johnson defeated Coke Stevenson for the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator.

Stevenson asked formally yesterday for a senate committee investigation of Texas runoff primary election. The investigator was ordered to Austin, the state capital, to make a preliminary investigation.

In his request, the former governor renewed charges he had made in federal courts that runoff election returns from three Texas counties—Duval, Jim Wells and Zapata—were false.

He unsuccessfully carried his fight to bar Johnson's name from the general election ballot to the U. S. Supreme Court after the State Democratic convention declared Johnson the nominee by a margin of nearly 87,000 votes out of nearly 1,000,000.

Stevenson asked for the investigation in a letter to Sen. Brooks (R-Ill.), chairman of the Rules Committee. He said the committee should act promptly because Texas law allows ballots to be destroyed 60 days after the runoff. That will be Oct. 27.

The second, which had twice been defeated at previous national conventions, would provide pensions to all World War I veterans and their widows, and children on the same basis now provided for Spanish-American war veterans and their widows and children.

The over-all pension plan, as adopted at the final session of the 30th National Convention, would include all veterans who served 90 days or more with the armed services and would be paid "irrespective of any other income received."

Corpus Christi Tessie to Be Introduced to Student Body At SMU Game in Traditional Between-Halves Ceremony

Patricia Ann Parker, a senior student at TSCW, is the sweetheart of the corps. Roy Blanton, social secretary of the senior class announced the selection of Miss Parker yesterday afternoon.

A foods and nutrition major from Corpus Christi, Miss Parker is a blue-eyed blonde and was the unanimous choice of the senior corps selection committee.

The sweetheart will be introduced to the student body between halves of the A&M-SMU game. She is to be escorted by the Corps Commander Bob McClure, who will present her with a bouquet of American Beauty roses while the Aggie band plays "Let Me Call You Sweetheart."

This ceremony has become an annual tradition at each A&M-SMU game and marks the beginning of the sweetheart's reign as first lady of the ROTC. She is frequently honored guest at other corps functions throughout the school year.

The 21-year-old Miss Parker has been active in senior class activities on the TSCW campus.

She was chosen by a committee of A&M seniors from a field of twelve nominees from the three upper classes at TSCW. The nominees were named by popular ballot from their own classmates after certain scholastic requirements had been met.

The Aggie selection committee was made up of senior cadets Bob McClure, John Orr, Don Kasper, Don Jarvis, Eric Gottlieb, Roy Blanton, John Dieb, Ted Copeland, Fred Davis, Joe Morris, Dick Baugh, and George Edwards.

Graney Outlines Five Point Program at Junior Meet

By CARLEY PUCKITT

Five principles for use in terminal education for junior colleges in Texas were outlined by Maurice R. Graney of Purdue University at a meeting of the Junior College Conference yesterday.

As outlined by Graney, education in Texas should develop close relationship with feeder schools, provide for varying kinds of study, not overlook provision for common basic needs, be kept flexible, and build a program on basis of needs and resources.

It was pointed out that American education has been characterized by periods of expansion and progress only to be followed by periods in which it experienced a leveling out process.

Graney also emphasized that, based upon a survey conducted by the American Society of Industrial Engineers, in 1941 the ratio of technicians to professional engineers in industry was 6.2 to 1.

This ratio is on the increase in favor of the technicians, thus creating a need for vocational training which Graney believes can be supplied by junior colleges.

"A survey for the purpose of establishing a junior college and the training that should be carried on there really includes a survey of the locality and its needs," stated Dr. Merton E. Hill, educator from the University of California.

Dr. Hill, a man who has spent a number of years in setting up programs of education in California, said that the original conception of the function of a junior college was that it should only be the first two years of professional training.

But that conception of a junior college has changed and now it is taking its place in filling a direct need recognized by industry and the community. The purpose of the junior college now is to offer vocational training which cannot be satisfactorily met either by high schools or senior colleges.

Dr. Hill believes that the junior college should be prepared to fill the need for vocational training courses which are becoming more and more important in Texas as it takes its place in an industrial economy.

Instances were pointed out where such surveys had been conducted in California among business managers and farmers to find out what courses were needed and desired. "It was considered quite a novelty when a college in California instituted a course in hotel management after the first world war," Dr. Hill said.

President F. C. Bolton pointed out in an earlier address that the fact had come to be recognized that a good citizen is a good workman.

"One of the reasons for growth of industry in Texas," said President Bolton, "is that industrialists have found that people in Texas can learn to become skilled workmen."

It was also emphasized by Professor R. L. Elkins, assistant to President Bolton that one of the biggest problems of industry today is placing graduates in the right type of job. Through vocational testing and guidance, the student is given an opportunity to find out what type of work he is best fitted for before he begins study on a career for which he may not be suited, Elkins said.

It is expected that the junior college can be used to train students for vocational and technical jobs which do not require a college degree.

The junior college conference will end tomorrow.

Faculty of Arts and Sciences Holds First Meeting of Year

Dr. W. H. Delaplane, acting head of the Economics Department, and D. D. Burchard, head of the Journalism Department, were introduced to the Arts and Sciences Faculty at its meeting Tuesday night.

Meeting for the first time this school year, the group re-elected Dr. J. G. Hays of the English Department as secretary. Dr. F. W. Jensen, head of the Chemistry Department, and Dr. Hays each gave talks on subjects within their fields.

Theme of the program was a report on the activities and accomplishments of the faculty for the year 1947-48, but because of the shortage of time, only three representative reports were presented about activities carried on for groups away from the college.

Dr. Jensen spoke on "Chemical Analyses in High Frequency Fields" a talk given in September to the American Chemical Society at its national meeting in St. Louis, Jensen discussed his invention for performing analyses and titrations in high frequency fields, without the use of indicators and troublesome electrodes.

Dr. Hays spoke next on "A Re-examination of the Final Phase of Mark Twain's Writings," which was presented before the South-Central Modern Language Association at its annual meeting in Biloxi, Miss. Hays pointed out that the public has misunderstood Mark Twain, thinking him the Bob Hope of yesterday; in reality, however, he was the great comic spirit in our literature who directed his laughter at the shams and injustices of life.

Dr. S. H. Hopkins, then spoke on "Marine Biology and the A&M College of Texas." Hopkins is devoting full time to Project No. 9 of the A&M Research Foundation. Project 9 is a study of the problem of oyster mortality.

Dean Harrington introduced J. L. Liverman, senior Biology major as a distinguished student. Liverman received the Krueger Award for 1948-49 and is also vice-president of the Texas Collegiate Academy of Science.
