A&M Professor Releases New Welding Fundamentals Book

A new textbook on welding, the second release in the past two months, has been written by H. P. Riggsby, assistant professor in the A&M Mechanical Engineering Department. The book, which is entitled "Welding Fundamentals" is published by Pitman Publishing Company of New York and London.

A&M Meats Team Fifth In Nation

Dr. J. C. Miller, head of the Animal Husbandry Department, has been notified that the meats judging team placed fifth in national competition at Chicago. Individual honors were taken by M. H. Keathley, who took first place in pork and placed second in the contest. The A&M team was in competition with 18 other state schools.

YMCA Establishes Wrapping Service

Free Christmas wrapping service for Aggies has been established at the YMCA, J. W. Robinson, president of the YMCA Cabinet, announced today. Any Aggies having Christmas gifts which need Christmas wrapping may have their gifts wrapped at the YMCA free of charge beginning today.

The following explanation is taken from the preface of the book. The objective of "Welding Fundamentals" is to present in text form, a compilation of the fundamentals and principles of welding that will be useful to the engineering student.

Because the engineer is primarily interested in fundamentals, the actual technique of welding is of secondary interest to him, and it is so treated in this presentation.

To learn welding as a vocation would require a great deal of time, several hundred hours of practice, and the engineer certainly does not expect or wish to master every manual trade that is related to his profession. However, a working knowledge of such trades will be of use in the practice of his profession and in dealing with men who work at them.

Riggsby states that the book has already been adopted as a text at the University of North Carolina and Alabama Polytechnic Institute. The first publication, "Elementary and Applied Welding," was written by Riggsby in collaboration with C. H. Groneman, acting head of the Industrial Education Department.
