The Personal Aircraft Research Center of the Aeronautical Engineering Department and the Engineering Experitical Engineering Department and the empired of three major. ment Station at A&M has been the subject of three major feature articles within the last two months in Aviation Week, a news journal of the aeronautical industry.

By The Associated Press

The November 8 issue of Aviation Week presented an illustrated feature article on the spin conference held at the Personal Aircraft Research Center in September.
This conference, attended by representatives of industry and several storm.

Storm Over State resentatives of industry and gov-ernment services, took up the problems connected with personal air-

The November 29 issue of Aviation Week included a report on the recommendations made to the Aviation Distributors and Manufacturers Association and the National Aviation Trades Association at their Cleveland convention by Fred E. Weick, the director of the Personal Aircraft Center here. Weick discussed the fields of research which his organization is

These include research on high lift devices to produce a plane for use on small close-in fields, longtitudinal and lateral control of personal aircraft at the stall, free control spin recovery, the design of spin-proof aircraft, and development of a straight flight system for light aircraft.

The most recent issue of Aviation Week features a report on two National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics research projects aim-

Aviation Week cites Professor Weick and Professor Koppen as two of the top light plane engi-neering experts in the country.

A&M Yearbook Ballot

(Place a check mark or X beside your choice.)

I favor changing the name of the A&M Annual.

In case the majority of the Student Body votes in favor of changing the name of the A&M Annual, I select the name indicated below with a check mark (or X) as my first choice.

The ballot is provided for only those students who do not live in one of the dormitories. In order for the ballot to be valid and counted, it must be signed legibly.

Ballots may be placed in the ballot box in the Student Activities Office, Room 209, Goodwin Hall or mailed through the Faculty Exchange in the Academic Building, postage free, to the Student

Deadline for submitting or mailing ballots is 5 p.m. Thursday,
