Importance of Rental Status Is Stressed by Area Director

Checking the rent control status of rental property for sale is fully as important as investigating its physical condition, Gordon L. Benningfield, area rent director, advised prospective buyers this week.

By their failure to check the registration statement on file in the rent office, several buyers have made poor bargains instead of good investments, the rent director said. In all such cases, he added, the buyer did not have the basic facts about the property under rent control.

In some cases buyers understood that the property was not under rent control or that the rent ceilings were considerably higher than they were in fact.

In other cases, sellers quoted correct ceiling rents but buyers did not understand that such rents included heat, utilities, and other services. In still other cases, buyers learned too late that the housing accommodations were under lease.

Benningfield advised every person considering the purchase of rental housing to call the rent office at Room 306 Varisco Building in Bryan, telephone 2-1207, for the answers to the following questions:

Is the property under rent control? If so, is it properly registered with the area rent office? What is the rent ceiling? What services must be provided by the landlord? Is part or all of the property under lease to present occupants?

By assuring himself on those items, the prospective buyer of rental housing will be better able to judge the merits of his proposed investment, Benningfield concluded.

Project for Study of Geologic Structures Authorized at A&M

A study of geologic structures by the use of replicas has been authorized as a joint project of the A&M Geology Department and the Texas Engineering Experiment Station, according to S. A. Lynch, head of the Geology Department.

A&M has been chosen to carry out the research phase of this project in spite of the fact that many other schools were attempting to obtain it, and the work will be done on the A&M campus.

The project will be carried out under the direction of Professor Lynch and Associate Professors T. J. Parker and A. N. McDowell. Two Houston men, Dr. L. L. Nettleton and Dr. M. King Hubbert, are serving as consultants.

Dr. Nettleton was a research geophysicist associated with the Gulf Research Development Company, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for approximately twelve years. In this capacity he directed a number of scale models and their relationship to known earth structures.

A number of oil companies have done some work in this field of investigation, and Dr. M. King Hubbert, director of Geologic Research of the Shell Oil Company, is a leader in company investigations.

The project will investigate salt dome structures, mechanics of depositional basins, mechanics of folded structures, and mechanics of fault structures.

The method is to develop by mechanical means scale replicas

Poage Says Democrat Leaders Use 'Gag Rule' Tactics in House

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6 (AP)—Rep. Poage (D-Tex) said today that the House, in adopting a change in rules designed to stop "gag rule" tactics, used the self same strategy to get the changes put across.

The Texan expressed this view in explaining his own position during voting Monday when procedures were changed so that legislation could be brought on to the floor for a vote after being bottled up for three weeks by the rules committee.

"The rules committee acts as a sort of 'traffic cop' for measures reported by committees which have held lengthy hearings on the legislation, declaring when they can go to the House for a vote.

On what was interpreted as a key vote on the issue, the administration won out by a margin of 275 to 142. Poage was among the minority.

"There has been a great deal of misunderstanding about that vote," Poage told a reporter.

"It actually was not a vote on whether we were to change the rules. It was a vote on whether we should apply gag rule tactics to those people who opposed changing the rules.

"As a matter of fact, I was in favor of changing the rules. I don't believe the rules committee should be allowed to continue its practice of previous years, of denying the House a chance to vote on a measure which has been reported favorably by some other committee.

"I voted in a caucus of the Democratic members to change the rules.

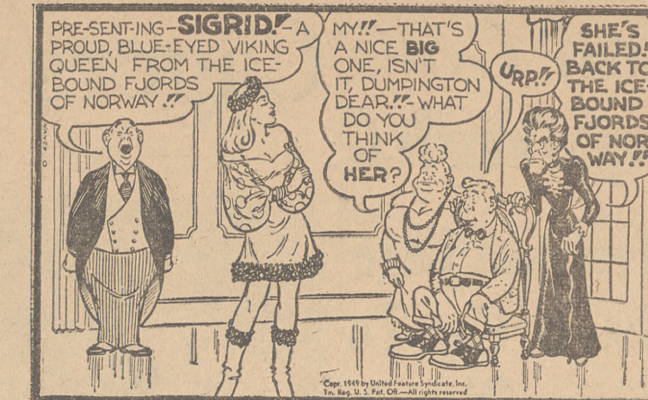

"I also voted in the House to change the rules, when that very question was up for a vote. The change was adopted on a voice vote.

"It was taken after the House by a 275 to 142 record vote adopted a motion to act on the previous question. This was a parliamentary procedure to stop all discussions, and debate and amendments to the proposal to change the rules.

"The majority of the House thus used the identical tactics to pass the amendment to the rules of the House, that the changes are intended to prevent."
