

PG Correspondence Course Aims At Broadening Views

By CLARK MUNROE

Some men with ideas of real value find themselves handicapped in business because they are all but inarticulate. The boss passes them over in favor of less brainy but more expressive individuals.

A&M's post-graduate correspondence course which leads to a bachelor of philosophy degree will help young professional men marshal their arguments and teach them how to say them effectively. Technicians will always be slaves to the word-artists until the technicians learn how to handle people, how to think logically outside their own narrow fields, how to talk and how to live. However good one may be at those things now, he can be better with practice.

Here is how to get into the program:

After graduation, or a few days before, you register with the Post Graduate School and are sent a complete outline for the course you want to take. A book list is included. For each lesson there are questions to be answered and sent in to be graded. No lesson a week is the normal load.

At this rate you complete nine credit hours each year, which means you get your Ph.D. in about four years. But four years is not the time limit.

You may obtain up to 12 hours toward your Ph.D. for work done in residence, but not over six hours may be transferred from another school. These hours must not have been used for a previous degree, must deal with humanities and must have been taken at junior or senior level.

After all the lessons have been completed, you take an exam over the work covered at one place near your home; the high school for example. This is to protect the value of your degree.

Among the courses offered is geography. Environmental factors such as space relationships, surface features, natural resources, water bodies and atmospheric conditions are studied as the basic foundations of national power. Agriculture and mineral supplies are vital to our industries, and our industrialists and agriculturists must know how they fit into the pattern and their relationships with other members.

Already available is a World Survey course. A course in South American geography is also being planned and prepared to inform the PG students about that southern continent which will increasingly be leagued with American commerce.

The economics department of the school has prepared courses dealing with labor problems, international economics, analysis of the South and a course dealing with agriculture's place in our economy. Economics is not a study of the way to run a business. It is concerned with broader problems related to the way in which your business deals with your neighbor's business.

Another article on the Post graduate correspondence studies will appear in a forthcoming issue of The Battalion.

Requests Accepted For Music Records By A&M Library

Requests for records for the music room can be made now, acting librarian Paul Ballance said today.

The music room now has $450 worth of records, which range from the Bach symphonies to Negro spirituals. For the purchase of additional records, the library has set aside a sum of $900.

The Electrical Engineering Department has termed the record player used in the music room the best one of its kind available on the market today.

From the many Beethoven records played, it seems that he is the most popular composer, Ballance said.

Florists to Meet Here Feb. 21 - 22

The Commercial Florists Short Course will be held on the campus Monday and Tuesday, Lucian M. Morgan, assistant director of the short course committee has announced.

Registration will be held in the College Greenhouse from 9 Monday morning until 12 noon. Registration fees are $3 per person.

Meetings of the short course, which is being sponsored by the floriculture section of the Landscape Art Department, will be in the YMCA Chapel, Morgan said.

Hearings Begun On A-M Fund Request

Hearings on A&M's biennial request for funds began in the Texas Legislature yesterday afternoon.

A schedule was prepared by House and Senate sub-committees for hearings on the requested appropriations of state colleges and universities. It slated House hearings at two yesterday and Senate hearings at two this afternoon on A&M's requested appropriations.
