

Bandits Flee in Terror When Whispering Smith Reappears

By ANDY DAVIS

Whispering Smith (Paramount) starring Alan Ladd, Brenda Marshall, and Robert Preston. (Campus)

Alan Ladd in a not too bad Western, does all right for himself, as the railroad trouble-shooter, Whispering Smith.

To the amazement of all "Whispering" pulls through after a successful gun fight with three desperadoes, in which he stops a couple of lead slugs from traveling any further. Of course, being nursed by his ex-girl friend, Brenda Marshall, whose husband, Robert Preston, happens to be his best friend, accounts for his rapid recovery.

Preston is fired from the railroad when he is suspected of foul play in handling wrecked cargoes. Whispering intervenes for him, but it is to no avail. After this episode, Preston really goes off the deep end, and gets himself entangled in some crooked deals involving train wrecking.

Whispering returns to town to locate the source of the trouble, and even tries to warn

Preston of what he is heading for, but he doesn't take his advice. Finally he is brought to a halt, at a bullet's end fired by Whispering. Ladd is better than expected in this type of role, and handles a six-shooter as well as he does a forty-five.
