Baseball is over except for participation in the National Collegiate Athletic Association play-offs. Texas, through its Coach Bibb Falk, has announced it will not play in the NCAA. It is probable that Texas A&M, which finished in the runner-up spot, will get the bid.

In anybody's book, one of them is Paul W. Trousdale. Said TIME's issue of December 2, 1946:

With a banker's natural curiosity old A. P. Giannin wanted to meet the 32-year-old builder who had already borrowed $30 million from his Bank of America, and was now asking for $50 million more. So he made a special, trip to Los Angeles, dropped in on Paul W. Trousdale, looked at his past projects and future plans. Banker Giannini's curiosity was apparently satisfied, for last week Trousdale announced that he was getting his $50 million loan.

Past Projects. The record which impressed Banker Giannini during the last season with a broken jaw, war the Paul W. Trousdale Construc-tion Co. had built 3,025 small houses, including seven big housing projects.

Now it was hard at work on 2,000 houses for veterans and was turning them out at the rate of ten a day.

BUILDER TROUSDALE
A.P. took a look.

Paul Trousdale got into the Los Angeles building pusiness by way of the University of Southern California and the ad department of Beech-Nut. After a year as an adman, Trousdale took a $125-a-mouth timekeeper's job with a local contractor, quit to form his own company with a $10,000 bank loan to finance it. loan to finance it.

On each project, he and his stock-holders put up the money to cover the On each project, he and his stock-holders put up the money to cover the cost of real estate, got Bank of America loans to cover all construction costs, had little trouble getting materials by his cash-on-the-line policy. Like most builders he formed a new corporation for each project, dissolved it when the project was finished. Thus his fat profits were taxable at only 25% as capital gains, gave him plenty of capital to expand. In all, he invested some $900,000 in his wartime projects, made another $900,000.

Futura Plans. Well heeled at war's end, he decided the time had come to plunge. For this he picked one of the best pieces of undeveloped land in Southern California, a 625-acre tract at Baldwin Hills, a short run from downtown Loc Angeles.

Now, with the Bank of America loan, Trousdale plans to build 8,000 rental units on 450 acres of it, along with a 26-acre super-shopping center. Eventually he hopes to build a hundred 13-story apartment houses on the rest of the land.
