

Finding Facts on Females Fine Work Says Staffer

BY ROGER COSLETT

"Women? No, it's the heat! It just can't be! But I never saw an Aggie who looked like this. A cool breeze in July? Gads, this can't be College Station."

"Could this be the heaven that all Aggies dream of? Am I alive?"

As I stood asking myself these questions, the answer came in the not-too-pleasant voice of a member of the fairer sex.

"Say, cowboy (I was wearing my boots and levis), watch where you're going."

My wayward wits (the whole half) returned to me as I mumbled a quick apology and regained by composure. My tongue returned to its reclining position, my eyes to their sockets. The thoughts of my mission was once again clear in my mind.

My assignment was to poll women and, if not prepared, I was at least eager.

Now the rule book says that a wide awake poll-taker is observant of his subject. Since my subject was the female, where could I be more observing than on the Northwestern University beach?

The poll was to be as representative as possible—it's coincidental that all of the selectees happened to be nice looking.

I used the gentle approach (I roped them and tied them down). Naturally, you can't learn much from a woman by asking her a direct question. So I constructed the questions in a misleading way.

To judge the value of a selectee's answer, one must know something of their background. I first asked them their age. (This is a nice thing to know at times).

Of the girls polled, the average age was 20 and one half years.

The girls ranged in classification from freshmen to graduate students. It seems that the graduate students gave more thoughtful and complete answers. Four years of fruitless mate-hunting had probably made them begin to give the problem more than just hopeful thought.

Although the girls were from all parts of the country, the freshest answers came from those who lived in the southwest.

Four of the selectees had actually been engaged at one time during their college careers. One had been fortunate to tie down and hold a husband.

A brief description of each of the girls was included in the background data—strictly in the interest of the poll, of course.

There were tall girls, small girls, slim girls, and just a lot of girls. Some were blonde, others red-headed, and others combination of the two.

They were cute, or very cute; attractive or "hubba-hubba." There were girls with pleasing figures, and then there were the kind that wore French bathing suits.

Where one girl was cocky, another was shy. Where one was undecided, another was prejudiced.

While some were young and intimate, others were quite mature. Some were young and immature, others were quite mature. Some were friendly, while others were just out and out wolfish or flirty. One small, tom-boyish girl was very frank and gay. An inflicting brunette appeared rather bored and bitter about life in general.

The majority were very pleasing and cooperative.

With all the vital statistics safely tucked away in my little black book, I got down to the business end of the poll.

The first question I asked was, "What would you think of attending an all girls' college?"

The various answers to this question will appear in tomorrow's Battalion.

Baylor Granted Army Hospital Use for Medics

President W. R. White of Baylor University has announced affiliation of the U. S. Army's Brooke General Hospital at San Antonio as a teaching unit of the Graduate School of Baylor University.

The affiliation, Dr. White said, came at the request of Major General E. A. Noyes, commanding general of the Brooke Army Medical Center, and with approval of the Surgeon General of the Army.

Dr. Wilby T. Gooch, vice-president of the university and dean of the Graduate School, said that the affiliation is the beginning of a unique plan in which Baylor seeks to encourage study and clinical research in the field of medicine. Baylor grants the Master of Science degree to students completing a prescribed course of work in the hospital's teaching program.

Twenty-two members of the Brooke Army Medical staff have been appointed to faculty status in the Baylor Graduate School.

The Graduate School dean said, also, that Dr. Hardy A. Kemp, director of graduate studies at the Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, has been named as director of the affiliated graduate program in Brooke hospital and in other institutions which may later seek affiliation with the university's plan.

Trustees Approve

Authority for Baylor's expansion into the San Antonio program was voted by a board meeting at Dallas last week. It adds a fourth campus—the others being Waco, Dallas, and Houston—to the university's graduate educational program.

The M.S. degree in clinical research also is offered through the Baylor College of Dentistry at Dallas and the Baylor College of Medicine at Houston. Baylor offers the Master of Arts degree in the graduate field in its five schools and colleges at Waco.

Dr. Gooch said that the affiliation plan is broad enough to allow similar cooperation with other hospitals who have teaching programs qualifying under Baylor Graduate School standards.

The affiliation arrangement is not untried, Dr. Gooch said. Such an arrangement has been worked successfully between the University of Minnesota and the Mayo Hospitals in Rochester, Minn., and between Wayne University at Detroit and various hospitals in the Detroit area.

Sports Writers Sing Praises Of Aggies On Comeback Trail

Fort Worth Star Telegram

"The Miracle of the Southwest Conference football season happened here this bright Saturday afternoon in full view of 31,000 spectators as Texas A&M College's much-beaten young team rose up to tie the mighty Southern Methodist University 27-27.

"It was a sophomore show for the courageous Aggies who, though they had won only one game and tied two in 22, still were fired with hope and ambition. They were tremendously improved ...

"This was not a piece-meal SMU team. The Mustangs had their absences because of injuries, but Rote, Doak Walker, and Dick McKissack were very much in the ball game ...

"A&M gained nothing but glory (for a conference tie bid), but that was tremendous for the 'new deal' team under Coach Harry Stielter ...

The Dallas Morning News

"Out of football's graveyard rose the dead men of Texas A&M. Entombed for weeks and shrouded in gridiron losses they came to life Saturday with a staggering and brilliant exhibition on Kyle Field. They tied the Southern Methodist Mustangs, eighth ranking team in the nation, 27 to 27, before 31,800 persons who cheered the resurrection ...

"There was no fluke about the Aggies' great upset. They played heroically, particularly Smith and a stout defensive center from Dallas, Jim Flowers, a former teammate of Doak Walker at Highland Park High ...

"Walker was his old self Saturday, but neither he nor Rote, nor Folsom, nor the rest could withstand the Aggie rally ...

"Smith, almost alone, paraded at the head of two of A&M's three last-half touchdown marches. Tacklers fell of his supercharged, tearing body like autumn leaves from a giant oak. On Saturday he was one of the greatest fullbacks of Southwest Conference history, lunging along for 175 yards, an average of more than 7 yards every time he pulled the ball to his side and roared goalpost ...

Waco Tribune Herald

"Rambling Robert Smith, a bulldozing sophomore fullback, led Texas A&M College to a breathless 27 to 27 tie with mighty Southern Methodist today in the Southwest's greatest upset of the season ...

"Bob Shaeffer, who hadn't kicked an extra point in three previous conference games, calmly booted his third in a row, matching Walker's effort in this department.

"He (Smith) shed enemy tacklers like a duck's back resists water, and only sheer weight of numbers finally halted him."

The Houston Post

"The Aggie Cadet Corps didn't have to stand in silent tribute to a beaten team Saturday, nor sing with saddened hearts ...

"It tumbled out of the stands and mobbed the players that had tied mighty Southern Methodist University 27-27. It carried them from the field, a time-honored way of honoring football heroes back in the twenties, but something of a novelty today ...

"There could be no alibis from Southern Methodist supporters. Their Mustangs played a wonderful game. The Aggies, for Saturday, were just as good."

Pocket & Cue Men Plan Tournament

The A&M Billiards Club will meet tonight at 7:30 in the YMCA to plan the billiards tournament which will begin next week, according to James H. Flowers, club president.

The rules of the pocket billiards game are very simple, Flowers said, and any one having a desire to play the game is invited to enter the tournament. The tournament will be held in the YMCA and will be student supervised.

All those who enter the tournament play will be recognized as members of the Club, he continued, and from the ranks of the club will come the five regulars and the three alternates who will compose the A&M Billiards team.

Then Gardemal, counting long and slowly to run out the clock, held on to the ball for three downs and the ball game was over.
