UN Members Distrust Top Level Conferences

By J. M. ROBERTS, JR.
Trygve Lie's suggestion for periodic high-level meetings of the United Nations Security Council, like his earlier proposal for a special session of the general assembly on the China and atomic questions, has met a cool reception.

Secretary Acheson set the pace, which was likewise evident at Lake Success, with a promise of consideration which was described as "a more or less formal reaction." Top U. N. officials and major delegations were understood to have scrapped the general assembly idea, both because there was little hope of real progress from it and because it is too late in the season to make arrangements.

Now there is a similar reaction toward Lie's proposal in a Washington speech that the nations start observing a never-observed rule that at least two security council meetings be held each year with the foreign ministers, and even possibly the heads of governments, attending.

American and British feelings, as in the case of various non-official proposals for a new high-level conference outside the U. N., is that no good purpose can be served by such meetings as long as the governments themselves are standing pat on the various issues which have resulted in, or grown out of, the cold war.

On the Chinese matter, for instance, negotiations are not considered worthwhile until there are indications that some members are ready to switch toward admission of the Communist regime. In the assembly, only 15 of the 59 nations have recognized the Communists. In the security council the count is six to five against, and Britain has just failed in an attempt to change it.

Unless the United States switches this situation, with Russia abstaining from participation in United Nations work as long as Nationalist China continues to sit in the various agencies, is expected to drag on indefinitely, and at least until general assembly time in the fall.

Russia, of course, might resolve it as she has done, in the past, by just coming back without saying anything. The Russians are understood to be interested, even to be friendly, toward Lie's idea of top-level council meetings.

Council Begins Plans for City Street Changes

Plans for the renaming and renumbering of College Station streets and houses were begun Tuesday night in an informal meeting of the city council according to Mayor Ernest Langford.

The council is now seeking the general citizen's opinion of a proposal brought up in the meeting concerning the renaming of the streets, Langford said. The proposal to add to the present name of each street the section of the city in which it is located. For example, Church Avenue would become Church North Avenue, Foster Avenue would become Foster East Avenue, and Pershing would become Pershing South Avenue.

Most of the citizens of College Station are familiar with the terms North gate, East gate, and South and West gates. But they are not familiar with the location of all the streets. This method of naming would immediately designate the general location of each street, Langford continued.

Those men attending the meeting were Councilmen J. A. Orr, R. B. Halpin, E. E. Ames; City Secretary, N. M. McGinnis; City Manager Raymond Rogers; Walter Johnson of the Postal Department, and Langford.

WHAT'S IN A NAME

... when, for example, you're talking about washing machines?

There are an estimated 700 different brand name washing machines on the market. Many, or all, of these washers are good, dependable machines.

But... only about two dozen of these are really well known by the public. Those that are known are made by manufacturers who have nationally advertised their products and, thru their advertising and the quality of their product, have earned public confidence.

When you place a Want Ad to sell your washer—or refrigerator or vacuum cleaner—or outdoor motor—be sure to include the brand name. You'll capitalize on the public's respect for that name... and your results will be better, faster and at a lower cost to you.
