

Municipal Blessings Ignored By Citizens Says Motheral

By BILL MEBANE

"College Station is truly blessed as a community even though we sometimes take all we have for granted." Such is the opinion of Joe R. Motheral, associate professor in the Agricultural Economics and Sociology Department and a civic leader of College Station.

Motheral is a native of Lockhart, attended Texas University from 1932 to 1934, but got married and came to A&M in 1937, graduated in 1939 and received his M. S. in 1941.

Since then, with a break for naval service and two years of research work at the University of Wisconsin, he has worked at A&M in the general field of land economics. At the present time he is engaged in full-time research on land tenure problems, farm relationship problems on farm population, and a study of the farm real estate market.

An active worker in improving College Station, he is president of the Kiwanis Club and chairman of the College Station Youth Activity Committee.

Advantages Told

He states that community like College Station is twice-blessed by having most of the advantages of a city and most of the advantages of a small town, with relatively few disadvantages of either.

"The basic problem of College Station is that it girdles an enormous piece of state-owned property and will always have special problems, but the cooperative relationship of the town and the college administration is one of the finer aspects of our life here. This is because of the great deal of talent both among our college staff members and our businessmen, who are giving unselfishly of their time and energies in building up our community."

Motheral thinks that a community clubhouse is a number one project for College Station because the school gym isn't quite suitable for most community activities. He is in support of the plan to rename and renumber the streets and believes that College Station should have residential mail delivery and better streets and sidewalks. He also believes that College Station should press forward its efforts to find a common basis of understanding with Bryan by minimizing points of differences, even though relationships as a whole are better than they have been in a long time.

Proud of School

He is proud of the Consolidated School and of the extra advantages it offers its students. "By not being so specialized as to limit participation of the individual students in school activities, a great deal has been done in developing physically and socially the youngsters of this community."

Mrs. Motheral is an active member of the Art Club and is neighborhood chairman of the current clean-up drive. Motheral has one son, Joe Grady, who is a freshman in high school.

Motheral has made numerous appearances on radio programs, a great deal has been done in developing the Farm and Home Program over WTAW. He has also written several magazine and research articles covering his research work.

College Station Babies Born at St. Joseph's

A&M Consolidated To Play Groesbeck Today

A&M Consolidated's Tigers will vie for their third straight District 23-A baseball victory this afternoon at Sports Park, playing the Groesbeck Goats.

Classy Roland Jones is the appointed Tiger hurler in a game scheduled to begin at 3 o'clock. Jones, with a 3-0 record, has allowed only three hits per game.

If the Bengals take Groesbeck, they will more than likely cop the south zone crown in District 23-A.
