Roy Coleman, a management engineering graduate of A&M who now is an industrial engineer for a mail order and department store firm, has successfully applied a new method for inspecting merchandise which the company buys. The method, which Coleman learned as a student at A. and M. helps in finding defective merchandise with certainty before it reaches the customer, without increasing the company's inspection cost.

Don't get us wrong, Ole Lou, being an "EXPERIENCED BUSINESSMAN" isn't going to turn down the books you want to sell, but the value of your books will jump 50% if you TRADE those old "study traps."
