Parking Meters? Well, Yes and No

Battalion City Editor

The original installation of parking meters in any town is a big question that draws quite a bit of controversy. In small towns especially is this true. Such is the case in College Station.

The idea didn't result from suggestions for additional revenues for the coffers of the city. The proposal was made at the June city council meeting at which time a businessman from the North Gate area presented a parking problem, which, he claimed, was causing him a loss of customers. Evidently store owners at the North Gate have been having trouble for some time now with people who insist on parking their cars in front of the stores for purposes other than doing business in that area.

Certainly the businessman's plea was justified as many of us can see by the great number of college students alone who have parked their cars in the North Gate shopping district while attending classes.

But also to be considered in the plan is the fact that many of the employees and even employers of these stores make a habit of leaving their automobiles in front of the places of business while at work.

This problem could be easily remedied, but student parking in the unasigned area does present a problem and should be dealt with accordingly.

After the plea for parking restrictions was made by the North Gate businessman, parking meters were suggested by use of the councilmen as a possible way to control parking there. The city dads discussed the suggestion and decided to give the idea additional thought instead of tabling limits of the city much faster than it can meet the demands of the ample water supply during the summer months, as well as a noticable insufficient amount dur ing the other seasons of the year

When taken into the city, these people were promised water and other facilities which can normal ly be obtained by being a part of a corporate city. Of course the tity couldn't extend many of these conveniences immediately, but they were promised to these people when conditions would permit installation.

Joe Sorrels, a resident of this section, has been to two meetings of the council lately telling them about the water shortage he and his neighbors have been suffer-

Sorrels told the council that in some places as many as four houses were being serviced off a one inch line which is hardly sufficient to supply one home with an ample water supply,

With the low water pressure which these people must contend with, there is also the problem of fire protection. In the individual case of Sorrels a hose would have to be strung 1500 feet to the near-st fire plug in case of fire.

Naturally fire insurance rates are going to be higher with the few fire plugs and low water pressure serving these people. The residents of this part of town also feel they are justified in asking for better water conditions be

House Votes Down New Amendment

Washington, July 18 (P)-The House yesterday killed a proposal to abolish the electoral college system to electing presidents, in ef fect for nearly 150 years.

Members voted 210 to 143 against submittiing a proposed constitutional amendment to the states for ratification. To have been adopted, the proposal would have had to receive a two-thirds major-ity of those voting. It failed by 96 votes.

Each party registered a majority against the change. Eighty-seven Democrats and 47 Republicans voted for it; 116 Democrats, 93 Republicate and one American Republicans and one American-

Republicans and one American-Labor representative against it.

The Senate had approved the proposed change Feb. I by a vote of 64 to 27. But it ran into heated objections in the House.

Senator Lodge (R-Mass) sponsored the amendment in the Senate. Rep. Gossett (D-Tex) waged the unsuccessful fight for House approval.

This was true mainly because The long July 4th week-end found the Cadets in other places than the post. A large percentage, 100% in the Aggies' case,
