

Molten Lava Flows Toward Sicilian Village

Mt. Etna, Sicily, Nov. 28— (AP)—A molten lava flow 650 feet wide from restless Mt. Etna threatened half a dozen villages on the northeastern slopes of the 10,741-foot high mountain yesterday.

The great high cone of Etna in Sicily's eastern coastal belt burst into flames and smoke last night, bringing panic to the surrounding countryside. A series of heavy earth tremors accompanied the volcano's eruption.

Residents of Catania feared the eruption would be worse than the last big burst of lava, ash and smoke from Etna in December, 1949.

Authorities estimated the creeping flow would reach the village of Fornazza about midnight. Fornazza's 1,500 inhabitants gathered their belongings in preparation for quick flight.

The lava already had burned off a grove of chestnut trees in its slow trek toward the sea. Shortly after the volcano erupted, lava was belching from six separate mouths below the rim of the crater.

Speeding on U. S. streets and highways last year injured 398,700 men, women and children.

(Editor's Note: We agree with reader Reynolds. Colonel Adams could be contacted tonight to determine how much is needed for the trip. Company commanders and civilian dorm masters could ask for donations in their units and dormitories tonight and tomorrow. If the money were raised before we left for Thanksgiving holidays, it should be in plenty of time for the Band to arrange for the trip.

(The Battalion night staff who put out today's paper managed to dig up $5 among them last night to start the fund rolling. Who's next?)

If Kids May Be There, You Must Exercise Care

The lives of hundreds of children—perhaps the life of your own child—would be saved if drivers observed three simple rules:

- Drive at a moderate speed that will enable you to stop quickly in residential and school neighbors;
- Keep on the watch for sudden, unexpected actions of children;
- And look around carefully before backing or starting up from a parked position.

Children should be seen and not hurt.
