

Cadet Nine Lacks Coach; Relief Not Seen For Present

By FRANK N. MANITZAS

In major and minor baseball leagues across the nation, teams are picking their managers for the coming season, but a major Southwest Conference Baseball power has yet to hire a coach.

It has been 158 days since last year's baseball and basketball coach Marty Karow announced that he was returning to his alma mater, Ohio State, as head baseball tutor.

It has been 89 days since schooling commenced at A&M, and yet, no one has been hired to replace Karow in the baseball department.

During the summer, we were told by official sources that the first objective was to hire a good basketball coach and then to concentrate on baseball. We believe everyone is more than satisfied with the cage mentor, but we would like some action on the baseball situation.

The big question, is who is A&M's next baseball coach and when will he be hired?

Did we hear you say, "What's the rush? Baseball season doesn't start until March!"

The rush is this. First, A&M's present baseball squad is confident that it has a good chance toward winning the SWC crown and dethroning the NCAA champions Texas. But trouble is already hitting the Cadets.

Last season's top freshman hurler, Jack Brinkley, who was all-state in Austin High and who struck out 32 men and won four games while losing only three last season, is now scholastically ineligible.

At the present time there are only four freshmen baseball players living in the Athletic dorm.

This could have been prevented had someone been taking an interest in the players. Someone like a coach.

And, official reports say that the Maroon and White nine wants a coach, not a last-minute-filler which at the present moment seems to be the want of some people, and may soon be the only way out.

The Athletic Council, composed of former students, present students, faculty members, and a chairman, and the athletic director are the persons responsible for the hiring of the coach. To this moment they have yet to release anything on the hiring of a coach although they have already met this year.

One Way and a Good Way Out

The baseball picture could take a brighter side. A part-time professional baseball player might be hired for the tutoring of the Cadets, but it seems unlikely. What may happen no one knows, we can only wait, see and hope.

Last year the Aggies finished Pitcher Pat Hubert, however, will the season with a 9-5, won-lost record, with three men being placed on the All-Conference team. All three of the baseball stars returned to A&M this fall, but one—Wally Moon—will be ineligible since he was signed to play pro ball.

Shortstop Guy Wallace and Wally Moon—will be ineligible since he was signed to play pro ball.

First SWC Golf Champs

The First Conference golf champions and the stars in the opening of A&M's $75,000 golf course were J. C. Landon of San Angelo, A. O. Nicholson of Dallas, Coach Gayther Nowell of Bryan, H. W. Brehmer of Kerrville, and Ellis Wilson of San Antonio.
