Aggie Players to Present Modern Dress 'Antigone'

By ALICE BURKS

When the Aggie Players present the modern version of "Antigone" on April 2 and 3, they will be enacting one of the classic Greek tragedies which has proved a favorite through the years.

"Antigone" is the last part of a three part story of a doomed family written by that master tragedian, Sophocles, 2,400 years ago.

The story begins with "Oedipus Rex" which reveals that Oedipus, who has been brought up from infancy in a foreign court, has returned as a man to Thebes, killed his own father, Laius, and married his own mother.

When these two sins are disclosed, his mother hangs herself, and Oedipus, putting out his own eyes, takes the child Antigone begging with him.

The second tragedy, "Oedipus at Colonus", deals with Oedipus' death in exile, and the return of Antigone to Thebes.

After Oedipus has deposed of his throne, his two sons, Eteocles and Polynices, agreed to share their father's throne, each to reign over Thebes in alternate years.

Eteocles, having reigned a full year, refused to yield up the throne to his brother. Polynices, supported by foreign troops, besieges Thebes, but is repelled by the Theban army. The brothers kill one another in single combat, and Creon, their uncle, becomes king.

Here the story "Antigone" opens. Creon, who was on Eteocles' side, ordains that Polynices is to be left unburied, while Eteocles is to be buried with pomp and honors.

Antigone rebels against the desecration of her dead brother and buries him. She is caught and there follows a chain of events which rocks the entire city.

When Jean Anouilh wrote and produced this play in Paris in 1943, he symbolized in Antigone all Frenchmen who rejected the German "New Order." Creon, a persuasive dictator who sets himself above religion and the people, represented the German rule.

The patriotic French saw in this play, performed in the presence of the German Police, a call to colors and a re-awakening of their basic spiritual independence.

Katherine Cornell, liking the play, had it translated into English by Lewis Galantiere, and the American version appeared on Broadway in 1940. With Miss Cornell cast as Antigone and Sir Cedric Hardwicke as Creon, the play received wide acclaim.

The words which are put into Antigone's mouth do not belong entirely to Sophocles, nor to Anouilh. They might find expression in any language, might belong to any age, to any country.

They are the basic truths of decency, the laws of both God and man and the arguments of Creon seem weak against such truths.

he is Musical Director and Conductor of the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, a post to which he was appointed in 1944.

Solo Violinist

Violinist Julius Hegyi, a native New Yorker, has performed as soloist with Leopold Stokowski and the City Center Symphony of New York. He was a member of this company for three years. He has also played with the NBC and CBS symphony orchestra.

Julius Hegyi has presented more than 300 chamber music recitals. He is founder and first violinist of the Hegyi String Quartet.

A graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, where he was concert master of the symphony orchestra, Hegyi has had the guidance of such outstanding musical figures as Joseph Szigeti, Fritz Reiner, Stokowski and the late Jacques Goddard.

Purge Goes On

Further, the party announced it had thrown out 169,000 party members in a continuing purge since Sept. 1. The fate of the purges was not disclosed.

But all this was only the latest of many purges, some of them—maybe most of them—ending in death for one-time loyal communists accused of going their own way or plotting against the party.

In Italy a number of communists have broken away from the control of Moscow and the party line laid down by the Russians, but since the communists aren't in control there these men still walk the streets.

The point is: if you were a communist living in a communist country, how could you ever be sure you wouldn't get hit with a meat-ax tomorrow?

He was promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel on Jan. 1, 1951.

Col. Umberto De Martino, who is a Bersaglieri or Italian Light Infantry officer, was born in 1905 and commissioned a 2nd lieutenant in 1924.

Upon conclusion of the Italian Armistice in September 1943, Colonel De Martino joined the Partisans where he distinguished himself in combat.

In November of 1944 he became assistant commander of the "Lepignano" Regiment and later Chief of Staff of the "Folgora" Combat Group, both of which were Italian units under Allied command.

Colonel De Martino wears the Silver Medal for Valor, which is the second highest combat award in the Italian Army.

Colonel De Martino is military attache to Canada as well as the United States.

A telegram received from Colonel De Martino read as follows: "Bringing with me the unforgettable Valentino features and the adventurous spirit of Hopalong Cassidy I will arrive at Texas A&M on Friday night March 9 Stop."

An hour and 20 minutes later the communists fled, taking their dead and wounded with them.

"We know their losses were heavy," Marchand said. "There was blood all over the place."

Sgt. Otto Lammert of Webster, Wis., said "I had my bayonet ready to do some slicing but I couldn't move out of that foxhole."

"If it hadn't been for old Bill thawing out that machinegun we all might have been killed," he added. "He always was a boy who could come through in a pinch."

Each One Reach One

What's This "Each One Reach One" Business?

That means that each and every student ought to be in constant touch with at least one boy in his home town who will be graduated from high school this spring.

Why? A & M NEEDS TOP QUALITY MEN . . .

Sure! So What?

So this: Tell your friend back home how much you like A&M and Aggie land. Invite him up to visit you every once in a while, and show him a good time while he's here. Get him acquainted with the campus and the school.

And Then?

And then persuade him to enroll in A&M this summer or this fall, when he starts his college career. You want to share it with your home town friends. GET BUSY, and get your friends interested in A&M, NOW!
