

House Says Return Tidelands

with the realm of Congress to decide.
After the first decision in 1945 the states gained congressional approval of a bill to give them title to the disputed lands. This was vetoed by Mr. Truman in 1946. Since then similar legislation has been introduced each year but never passed both branches.

Rejects Substitute Proposal
In passing today's bill, which was introduced by Rep. Walters (D-Pa) the House rejected a substitute proposed by Chairman Celler (D-NY) of the House Judiciary Committee, known as the Interim Bill.

The Celler bill would have validated present oil leases, given the Secretary of Interior power to negotiate all further leases for five years, given the states 37 1/2 per cent of all royalties collected and impounded the remainder until such time as actual title was decided by Congress.

A proposal by Rep. Mansfield (D-Mont) to provide that royalties from the disputed lands should go into a fund to aid education was eliminated on a point of order.
The House also turned down a proposal by Mansfield which merely would have given states title to lands beneath inland navigable waters, bays and harbors.

Would Limit States

It rejected compromise suggestions by Rep. Case (R-NJ) who would have limited all states to ownership of a strip seaward three miles and to eliminate state participation in royalties collected beyond the 3-mile limit.

A proposal by Rep. Burnside (D-WVa) to use all royalties collected beyond the 3-mile limit for retirement of the public debt likewise was rejected.

Celler said an effort had been made by proponents of the bill to "frighten the wits out of other states" by contending that the Federal Government would take title to all lands beneath all navigable waters, bays and harbors, including the Great Lakes.

"That is balderdash, tommyrot," he said. "The Federal Government never had any claim to any inland waterways."

Celler predicted that if the quit claim bill reaches the president, he will veto it.
Rep. Boggs (D-La) called the Celler bill a "get-a-foot-in-the-door" bill and said once the administration of the leases were given to the Interior Department it never would be returned to the states.

Britain Agrees To Send Group For Oil Talks

London, July 31 —(AP)— Britain arranged yesterday, under advice of American Negotiator W. Averell Harriman, to send a cabinet mission to Tehran for a new try at settling its bitter oil dispute with Iran.

Foreign Secretary Herbert Morrison announced the decision to Commons. He added that there are a number of points to be clarified before the cabinet mission, headed by Richard Stokes, Lord Privy Seal leaves for Tehran. He refused to disclose what the points are.

Harriman, President Truman's trouble-shooting diplomat, said he was optimistic. He started back to Tehran to be ready to give any help needed.

Morrison made clear the British mission was being sent as a result of cabinet talks with Harriman, who made a flying trip to London from Iran Saturday to clear up an Iranian offer to discuss the oil nationalization law on a new basis.

Prime Minister Attlee said the United States had "strongly pressed" Britain to accept the principle of oil nationalization in Iran.

"We accept that principle," Attlee said. "The details will have to be worked out."

"We have, however, to be prepared that the Persians (Iranians) may decide to cut off their noses to spite their faces, and this will require a great deal of careful and very patient negotiation."

The months-long stalemate over ownership of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company (AIOC) property in Iran has closed off a major source of oil for the British Navy and Western Europe.

MSC Urges Payment Of Room Deposits

Students, former students, faculty and staff members who have already received confirmation of room reservations in the MSC for the coming school year activities should pay the required deposits as soon as possible said Mrs. Mozelle Holland, manager of the MSC Guest Rooms.

The early deposit is necessary so that the hotel staff may make the necessary arrangements early and avoid last minute confusion and mix-ups.

Cancellations should be made also as soon as possible because of the large waiting list of guests who desire accommodations but were unable to secure them, said Mrs. Holland.

"The MSC is booked solid throughout the year for all football games, class dances, and all other major social events. The only date that has not yet been drawn is for Commencement, but I feel sure that all available reservations will be accepted by the drawing winners," added Mrs. Holland.

Koreans Show Disfavor and arguing for the U.N. position. Then he listened to General Nam. When the North Korean had finished, Joy suggested an adjournment until Wednesday — unless Nam had something more to say.

Nam II replied he "certainly did have something more to say," General Nuckols reported. And he said it.

Nuckols did not disclose the Red general's remarks, but his listeners concluded that Nam asked the allied delegation to reconsider the Red proposal overnight. "I make no predictions," Nuckols commented at this point.

"Both sides fully understand the views of each other, although they do not appreciate and certainly do not agree with each other."

No Stalemate

The briefing officer said he did not intend to give the impression the talks had reached a stalemate over the issue—the second point on the five point program.

Asked for his personal impression, Nuckols said: "I would say that an area of disagreement continued to exist."

The area of disagreement is something like 2,000 square miles of North Korea. It is rugged hill territory and a natural defense line won by fighting U.N. troops.

The present battle line cuts roughly 80 miles across North Korea, extending as much as 20 and 30 miles north of the 38th parallel at points, then dipping south across the parallel not far from the Kaesong meeting site.

The U.N. position is that opposing troops should be in good defensive positions during subsequent truce talks. And, the allies say, you simply don't find good military positions along such an artificial line as the 38th parallel.

'Boll Weevil' Keane Out-Picks Average

Harlingen, Tex., July 31 —(AP)— Ed (Boll Weevil) Keane picked 321 pounds of cotton yesterday, about 100 pounds more than the daily average he must maintain the next six days to live up to his boast that he could pick a bale in a week.
The fast-talking disc jockey started at 5:10 a.m. and quit at 7:40 p.m. with an hour and a half for a lunch of grapes followed by a brief siesta.

Keane returned to Harlingen tonight in an ambulance, preceded by a police car with siren screaming and followed by a convoy of a dozen cars carrying a cheering gallery.

He got a big ovation from a crowd of 100 as he walked glassy eyed into the Madison Hotel. Spectators at the field today could not tell where he had picked and where he hadn't. Keane said he hadn't contracted to clean the field.

He drank gallons of water and two quarts of milk during the day. The sky was overcast most of the day but the temperature rose to 96.

Before beginning this morning he announced: "I will either pick that blasted bale or be carried out of the field unconscious from thirst or exhaustion."

The "boll weevil" got himself behind the eight ball a couple of weeks ago by bragging that he could pick a bale of cotton in a week. His companions over a cup of coffee guffawed and put up some money he couldn't do it.

Keane invited any and all to come out and watch him. "Just don't stand between me and the breeze," he quipped.

If the disc jockey makes good his boast, a Texas cotton exchange will give him five cents a pound above the market price and he'll win more than $1,000 in prize money.
