Tech Denies $400,000 Grid Money Used

Lubbock, Tex., Aug. 9—(AP)—Texas Tech officials denied emphatically last night that there was a $400,000 fund to be used in providing the college with a football team.

Head Coach DeWitt Weaver snorted that the fund—if any—would come closer to $400 than to $400,000.

He was commenting on a statement by Coach Bob Winslow of The University of Arizona, in a talk before the Optimist Club at Tucson, that Texas Tech is an example of oversubsidization.

Money to Raise Team

Winslow said Tech is furnished $400,000 with which to go out and raise a football team and that "I don't know whether it's oil money or where it comes from."

Grove Frolic Will Feature 'Shipwreck'

Activities are underway at the Grove every night of the week for students, faculty, and married students' families. Movies are shown every Monday, Tuesday and Thursday nights. Tonight, for instance "Vengeance Valley" is showing, featuring Robert Walker and Burt Lancaster.

The perennial favorite, the square dance, is the order for each Saturday night at eight, with Erskine Hightower calling the dance. Wednesday and Sunday nights feature skating with juke box music. Bring your own skates, and enjoy the whole evening free of charge, or pay a small fee, and use skates which belong to Student's Activities Office.

Friday evenings bring the weekly round dance, to the music of the Aggieband Combo. Moonlight sets the scene, and refreshments are on sale at the concessions stand every night.

The highlight of this summer's activity schedule at the Grove will be a "Shipwreck" dance (Wear what you had on "when the ship went down") August 17. This will be the final round dance of the Summer.

Irate Housewives Continue Protest

Marshall, Tex., Aug. 9—(AP)—The defiant Marshall housewives say they'll take their fight against collecting Social Security taxes from their domestic servants straight to the congressmen.

They plan to write a personal letter to every congressman urging repeal of the federal law requiring them to collect the taxes.

Those were the plans being made today while a quiet settled down and no more treasury agents appeared to nick their bank accounts.

Tuesday and Monday the agents took a total of $44,23 from the accounts of ten women who had refused to pay the taxes. The money represented the taxes due and the penalties for the first period of the year ending April 30.

Ten lettermen were lost from last Fall's team with all of them gaining their numeral as a line-man. Most of them will be replaced but by doing so, reserve strength will be sapped.

Even so, the 1951 squad has a potential which can't be fully measured although the sportswriters and coaches have put "the monkey on A&M's back" by picking them to take the conference crown this Fall.

Only after the gun is fired on Nov. 29, will we know whether or not "1951 is the year."

Costliest Drouth

The Austin American-Statesman Farm Editor Dave Shanks wrote that Central Texas is suffering "its costliest drouth since 1925."

Some 2,500 head of cattle moved through the Abilene Livestock Auction Tuesday—a thousand more than the usual run at this time. Bob McDaniel, president of the Abilene Livestock Auction Commission, said dry weather, poor ranges and low water supplies were forcing an early market.

And add to the victims of the heat wave: 14 snakes. They were dead when they arrived at Glade-water today for a snake show. They were Texas Diamond rattlers, Mexico rattlers, South American pythons and boa constrictors being shipped from New Braunfels.

Finishes Bale

Finishing one day early amid the numerous onlookers from all over the country, Ed (Boll Weevil) Keane of Harlingen completed the bale of cotton he wagered friends he could pick in a week. Many Valley residents and business organizations had offered prizes totaling nearly $2,000 if he could pick the bale.

Keane Completes Bale of Cotton

Harlingen, Tex., Aug. 9—(AP)—At 7:44 o'clock tonight a tired disk jockey straightened his back and said, "I made it, didn't I?"

Ed "Boll Weevil" Keane, who boasted that he could pick a bale of cotton in seven days, made good that brag. About $1,600 dollars in prizes are now his.

Keane, employee of a Harlingen radio station, gathered 1540 pounds of cotton, which ginned a 542-pound bale.

Rain had held up Keane's cotton-picking efforts on three occasions, but judges allowed him time out for the rain.

Keane—a small fellow with a mustache—wasn't used to manual labor. But he stuck to his task gamely.

He sucked lemons to slake his thirst. His hands grew raw and red.

As Keane bent to his task, kibitzers followed him closely. A group of girls set up a cold drink stand. It looked like they did a land office business.

Cotton men from as far away as Louisiana traveled to see Keane work.

The prizes will go to the Weevil after his boast, made in the presence of skeptics who made him suit words to action, that he could pick a bale of cotton in a week.

About 1,450 pounds of field cotton are required to produce one finished 500-pound bale. The radio disc jockey entered the field today aiming at sacking a full 1,500 pounds by night-fall. The extra 50 pounds, he figured would serve as insurance against quibblers.

Asked when he plans to go back to work spinning records for his radio station, Keane raised a smug eyebrow.

"The mere thought bores me," he said. "I have come to like life in the open air.

"Perhaps," he continued leftily, "I will buy the station with my winnings and let somebody else spin records while I loll on some sunlit beach. On the other hand," he added, "I may make a personal appearance tour. I hear they love me in St. Joe."

Unskilled Politician

There is also the objection, and the most public one, that Eisenhower is not skilled in political management, despite his recognized organizational ability, that his great successes were in a time of emergency when he had the backing of some of the world's most knowledgeable men.

They will say that Eisenhower would be no less confused than anyone else on such a matter as economic controls, and that his experience cannot be a substitute for practical knowledge of political and economic possibilities.

Racial Issue Now Entered In Child Labor Controversy

(Editor's note: On yesterday's editorial page, a newsletter from Sixth District Representative Olin E. Teague told of his efforts to facilitate child labor by testifying before a house committee in favor of it. This story by Associated Press Washington correspondent Tex Easley seeks to point out further views on the issue.)

Washington, Aug. 9—(AP)—Behind the recent congressional argument over child labor in cotton fields is a racial issue.

Involved is a bill which would permit state and local authorities to use their own judgment whether children under 16 should be permitted to pick cotton during school hours.

Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin opposes the legislation. West Texas farmers and school officials declare there will be havoc and waste in West Texas cotton fields unless the measure passes.

Migrate Workers

There is a racial angle because most of the workers involved are migrant Latin-American families who come from the Rio Grande Valley to work in West Texas cotton fields.

Sam Allen of Lamesa, summing up the views of a group of West Texans who came to urge passage of the legislation, said:

"We certainly are not opposed to the Latin-American children getting an education. What we are trying to do now is show government officials we have a serious and practical problem to face.

"We need the cotton, for the defense effort. We will have the cotton, but we face a serious risk. It won't get picked if they won't relax the present ban against hiring those under 16 during school hours.

"Crew chiefs who bring in this help each year tell us now that they will have difficulty recruiting all the help we will need. Those men won't come up if they can't bring their families, and they can't afford to come with the children unless all of them are working.

"The result is that they, as well as the farmer with the crop to pick, suffer financial hardships."

Tobin held the Texans he felt that enough help would be provided under the Mexican farm labor treaty.

Whether or not the Latin-American Texans migrate with their families in great numbers this year remains to be seen. The effect of large numbers, as occurred last year, was related by another member of the visiting Texans.

Dismiss Schools

"When we have a large influx," said Roy Boyd, superintendent of county schools in Lubbock county, "we simply have to dismiss school."

"We don't have the buses to pick them up, the classrooms to accommodate them nor enough teachers to handle them. That, of course, penalizes our own permanently enrolled children whose parents are taxed to keep the school doors open."

Tom Sutherland of Austin, head of the Texas Council on Human Relations, recently conferred with state department officials on related problems.

The former head of the Texas Good Neighbor Commission told the state department that Texans are making a genuine effort to give Latin-Americans a better deal.

Improve Relations

He supplied officials with copies of a booklet issued by the council telling of the efforts of his organization to improve relations between English speaking and Spanish-speaking peoples. The publication says that along the South Texas border these two great cultures run up against each other, creating a problem unlike that anywhere else in the Western hemisphere.

Among the officials with whom Sutherland talked was Tom Mann. Formerly of Laredo, now assistant secretary of state in charge of Latin-American affairs, Mann accepted copies of the booklet to distribute to American embassies in the hemisphere, in the hope it would counter some of the often-heard reports below the border that Texans treat peoples of Latin-American blood unfairly.

Heat Moves In on Texas Farm Crops

Austin, Aug. 9—(AP)—Texas' searing drouth fingered its way upstate to the northwest's dryland crops this week, the United States Department of Agriculture reported today.

Throughout the state crop prospects and pastures deteriorated still further.

Widely scattered showers brought only spotted temporary relief.

Cotton was opening prematurely in central, eastern and southern counties.

Range and pasture feed was browning in all areas except in northwest favored spots.

Virtually all cotton in the state, except irrigated areas, urgently need rain, although early crops in the southern half of the state are too advanced to be benefited, USDA said.

The soaring temperatures and withering pastures brought shrinkage of livestock. Stock water haulage was increasing in the east and southeast as many surface tanks and creeks ran dry.
