TEXAS A&M COLLEGE and the Oklahoma University will end a long and fruitful series of football games Saturday at Kyle Field.

This will be the last chance for the Fighting Farmers to down the Sooners for a few years to come in regular scheduled competition, as Kentucky replaces the Sooners on the 1952 Aggie schedule.

The Cadets will be seeking to revenge a bitter defeat at the hands of the Sooners last year. Texas A&M had fought the Sooners to a stand-still and were beating them at their own game 28-21 in the final minutes of play.

Then Oklahoma unleashed a desperate passing attack that carried for two last minute touchdowns, and put the Sooners ahead 34-28 with 34 seconds left to play. The Aggies played their hearts out that day, and its a good bet they'll be after the Okies with blood in their eyes Oct. 6 on Kyle Field.

Oklahoma has enjoyed the home field advantage over the Aggies ever since the current series started in 1944. The last time the Cadets triumphed was with Pee-Wee Smith, Monte Moncrief; Bob Goode and Co., in 1945, to a score of 19-14.

Boasting two All-Americans in Billy Vessels, left half, and Jim Weatherall, left tackle; the Sooners have a squad which is deep in reserves and rich in playing experience.

In many of their games last year, Bud Wilkinson, head coach, could and did field a team made up entirely of sophomores. Most of those sophs are back as juniors a mixed with veterans such as Bert Clark, guard; J. W. Cole, tackle; Dick Heatly, halfback; Jack Lockett, end; and Bill Price, end, they form a superb offensive machine.

Coach Wilkerson, like most coaches, has been moaning the blues about such departed performers such as Buddy Jones, one of the best defensive safeties in Oklahoma history and Leon "Mule-train" Heath. Gone are Frankie Anderson, Claude Arnold (remember last year's game), Norman McNabb, and Harry Moore.

However, the Sooners are as potent as ever; the Virginians of William & Mary will attest to this. Last Saturday Oklahoma smothered William and Mary 49-7.

Looking at the Aggie side of the ledger, we find that Billy Tidwell, halfback, who was injured in the UCLA game will be ready to romp against the Okies, as will Bob Smith, Glenn Lippman, and Dick Gardemal.

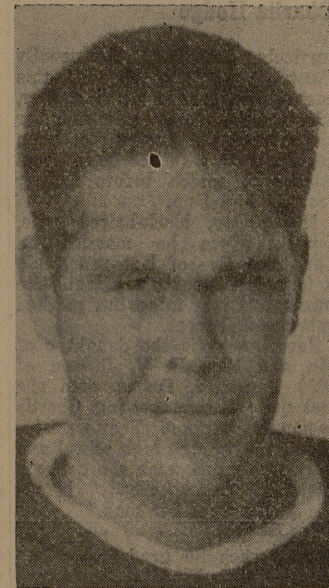

Rated the number two game in the nation, the Aggie-Sooner fracas should prove one thing; if we can take this one, we should go all the way.
