

From Forest to Firewood In Four Steps

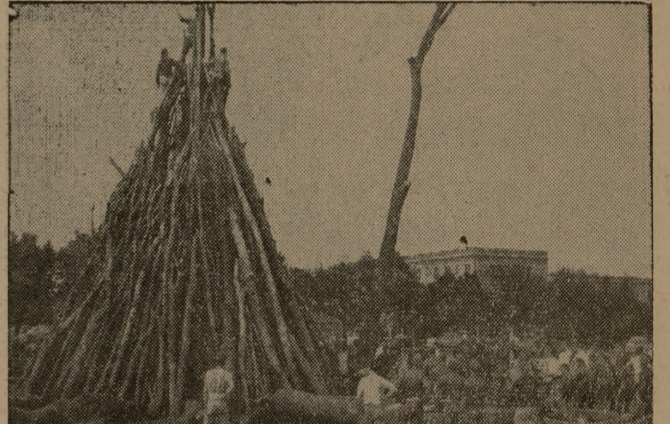

Many things have to be considered when building a bonfire, especially an Aggie bonfire. There is always the problem of getting wood. Aggies have been in wooded areas near the campus for over a week, selecting and felling hundreds of trees. After the trees were felled, the branches were trimmed and the larger logs cut into sections and loaded on trucks, which carried them to the bonfire site on the main drill field. Most of the work was done over the weekend. As usual, when Aggies build the annual bonfire before the TU game, it rains. This year was no exception.

The rain has continued since Friday night with hardly a letup. On top of that, a norther further hampered the progress. Despite classes, quizzes and the weather, the bonfire began to take shape Saturday afternoon. Almost 3,000 students turned out, dressed in fatigues and blue jeans, and set to work in earnest. The last picture shows the bonfire as it looked Saturday afternoon. Since then many more logs have been added and more have been brought in from the surrounding countryside. All that remains is adding the finishing touches today and applying the oil tomorrow afternoon for the annual ceremony tomorrow night.

The speaker said approximately 40-50,000 legal deer will be killed in Texas this year. Many hunters are surprised with the good condition of the animals this year after the severe drought which blanketed the entire state last summer, he indicated.

The Lions elected W. H. "Bill" LeRoy to a directorate position in the club. They also named T. S. "Tom" Stephens Assistant Lion Tamer and Dr. A. B. Medlen third vice-president.

The Chicago White Sox players were ordered to take physical and dental examinations before departing for their homes at season's end.

The church sanctuary was decorated with arrangements of similax and chrysanthemums. Gold tapers were used along the choir rail and in the choir loft. Gold and bronze chrysanthemums were interspersed with potted palms to form the altar decorations.

The people in charge may have their problems but all most of us worried about was staying out of the way of some of those logs. Of course they had first aid stations and cars to take you to the hospital if you did get hurt, but who wants to miss the burning after all the work you've done?"
