

Military Panel Convened For Disciplining Second Day

THREE MEMBERS of the cadet corps appeared before a disciplinary panel yesterday—the first such case on record this year.

The second day of school and the military department has already been forced to bring certain men in for disobeying college regulations.

Students involved in the case were said to have been "orienting" a freshman, and in so doing caused him to leave this school. It is indeed a bad start for the men involved for after the panel was dismissed, recommendations were passed by the Dean of Men that they be placed on military probation for one semester, be given an official reprimand, be given extra duty, and be restricted until Thanksgiving.

Splitting the Corps: Will it Help or Hurt?

SIGNS of the times: At the armory uniforms are now being issued in two different lines. One is for cadets taking ground force military science and the other is for air force cadets.

Slowly but surely A&M is being turned into a two corps school. The first step was the division of Ross Hall into two units, with the PMS&T heading the Army and the PAS&T heading the Air Force.

Next was the revising of the upperclassman cadet corps area into two divisions, the Ground Force Division and the Air Force Division.

The third and final step will be the change of uniform by the Air Force from Army khaki to Air Force blue.

Maybe this will be a boost to the corps, with the resulting rivalry and building of spirit within the branches serving to lift the Cadet Corps to new time high military rating.

Let's hope so, because the blues aren't far away.

What About Safety on Campus?

EVERY YEAR The Battalion publishes a special edition at Christmas time to warn students to be careful while driving home on crowded highways.

It would be well for someone to notice a few safety hazards now on our campus instead of waiting until Christmas. Included is the need for stop signs at several key corners. Also badly needed are improved streets without unpaved parts remaining weeks after a new pipe line has been laid.

There are more cars on the campus than ever before. Football season is here and the big crowds will be flocking to this campus with thousands of cars. Let's keep our campus safety record clear by doing something about the streets and dangerous corners as soon as possible.

'Don't Bother to Knock' Fails, Even With Monroe

By JERRY BENNETT
Battalion News Editor

("Don't Bother to Knock", starring Richard Widmark and Marilyn Monroe—20th Century Fox—Palace Theatre.)

"Don't Bother to Knock", Hollywood's latest frustrated contribution for the betterment of American lunatics is a third rate melodrama about a psychopathic baby sitter in a first class hotel.

Adapter from Charlotte Armstrong's "Mischief," the film unpins Marilyn Monroe from college dormitory walls to dress her in her first starring role. Miss Monroe attempts to portray a confused young psycho who believes murder is the best method for preventing little children from interrupting her moments of romance.

With this novel attitude, she accepts a job one night baby sitting in a hotel. After putting her charge to bed, Marilyn starts making herself conspicuous (as only Marilyn can) by waltzing around the room in a negligee.

Richard Widmark, who is staying in the same hotel, sees her from his window while killing a fifth of whiskey to forget his association with the film. By manipulating the venetian blinds in semaphore code, Marilyn invites him over for a little shock treatment.

Since, from a distance, Marilyn looks as good as her calendars, he accepts the invitation. With Monroe and Widmark together in the same room, any child is bound to start crying. In the resulting confusion, Marilyn completely blows
