

Basic Course Taken From Required Study

Basic 101 has been eliminated from the required curricula of the college and will now be offered as an elective along with several other basic courses, said J. R. Bertrand, Dean of the Basic Division.

Entering students next fall will take a series of tests to determine their interests, achievements, aptitudes and personalities. After completing these tests, students may choose the electives that will be most beneficial to them, Bertrand said.

The new plan is a move to help students in choosing their vocations and was introduced by the deans of the various schools. The plan will be executed in the three following steps:

1. Determination of the students' needs.
2. Study of the vocations and opportunities.
3. Correlation of the first two steps.

The curricula in every school will have space for two elective basic courses, but courses will be optional to the students, Bertrand stated.

Freshmen next fall will be required to meet assembly every week for about a month to hear outstanding speakers and announcements which concern them.

Four Aggies Honored For Bridge Game

Four A&M students will receive campus champion certificates from the National Intercollegiate Bridge Tournament Committee at the annual meeting of the MSC council, April 19.

Purdue and Princeton won the national tournament which was completed February 23. These were announced March 15.

Warren Sexton, Luke Senior Jr., James K. Rackel and David W. Williams are the four campus champions. Besides the certificates which they will receive, a plaque with the name of each winner will be given to the MSC.

More than 3,000 students entered by 110 colleges and universities took part in the 1953 contest. A&M had six contestants in the tourney.

Worcester Institute and the University of Washington teams placed second. Two teams from Notre Dame, one of which included the son of the noted bridge authority Oswald Jacoby, tied for third place with a pair from Dartmouth College.

Rice Institute, defending champions, captured regional honors this year.

Analyses of every hand played by the Aggies are in the offices of Miss Gladys Black of the MSC staff. Anyone who is interested is invited to drop by and look the analyses over, Miss Black said.
