Student Life Committee To Name Who's Who Monday

Two Policemen To Guard Here For Holidays

The A&M campus will be patrolled by two campus policemen at all times during the Christmas holidays, said Fred Hickman, chief of campus security.

The two men will work in shifts to provide a 24-hour vigil. No increase or decrease in the regular number of campus policemen has been made.

Hickman said traffic problems will be at a minimum here during the holidays, but a constant watch must be made in the dormitory areas to stop break-ins.

Students breaking in the dormitory to pick up a forgotten possession have caused trouble in the past, Hickman said.

Anyone should see Hickman in Goodwin hall before trying to break in the dormitories.

During the holidays campus police also guard classroom buildings and offices against unauthorized entrance.

The committee studying the distribution of Twelfth Man Bowl profits will also make its report at the meeting. Carroll Phillips is chairman of the committee making the study.

Pat Wood, president of the senior class, will report on the senior class evaluation.

The committee will consider an amendment to the Student Life constitution to create standing committees on student publications and the yell leaders.

The meeting is set for 4:30 p. m. in the student senate chamber of the Memorial Student Center.

'Progress Requires Change,' Says Dunn

"Progress requires change and it would not be my wish that we return if we could to the 'good old days,'" said J. Harold Dunn '25, president of the Former Students association, last night at the initiation banquet of the Ross Volunteers.

The topic of Dunn's speech was "Looking Forward to Greater Opportunities."

He emphasized the value of things to be learned from one's elders and used specifically references from his own life and from that of Lawrence Sullivan Ross, former president of A&M and namesake of the Ross Volunteers.

Education Has Changed

Education has changed also, said Dunn. Fifty years ago, he said, only 11 per cent of American young people went to high school and barely five per cent were graduated.

Now, he said, 73 per cent of American teenagers attend high school and 49 per cent are graduated.

He added that more young people are attending colleges and universities today than attended high school 30 years ago.

Concerning progress, Dunn said his wish not to return to the "good old days" applies to A&M as well as to other things in life.

"Don't Muff Opportunities"

Dunn warned young men not to "muff" opportunities that come their way. He said there have always been opportunities but added that the future holds more than have been available in the past.

Changes, progress and opportunity, Dunn said, bring problems which seem to make the problems of the past seem small in comparison.

"The progress in our time and the good that will be accomplished will be in proportion to our success in this regard," said Dunn.

The RVs initiated 83 new junior members.

J. Frank Ford and Fehrlin (Sonny) Tutt repeated the membership oath for the rest of the juniors.

Dunn was introduced to the group by William M. Reed, commanding officer of the Ross Volunteers and cadet commander of the first wing.
