Challenge For Sacrifice Is Answered

A challenge issued by Dr. Louis Evans, principal speaker for Religious Emphasis week, brought quick results.

In a Sunday morning message at the A&M Methodist church, Evans told of a group of communists who went without food for four days in order to get enough funds to print their message.

Evans then challenged Christian people for a similar sacrifice for their beliefs.

Yesterday morning Rev. Nolan R. Vance, pastor of the church, received an anonymous letter with the following message:

"Dear Sir,
This morning in your church, we heard Dr. Evans tell of a communist who went without food for four days so that the word could be published. It seems to me that every Christian should make some sacrifice to publish the Word. Enclosed you will find $12, which is the cost of feeding me for four days. Let this be a contribution to foreign missions."

their school councils. However, Landiss explained the SLC still has the power to remove these editors.

White maintained he thought a special publications committee would help the editors. He said if such a committee had existed during the John Clark affair in November, there might have been less hard feeling against The Battalion.

The Battalion was criticized for printing the student ousting of the Odessa junior for which no one was ever punished. But White said ill feeling had been building up against The Battalion editors since before the first of school.

If the editors had been brought before the SLC after the Clark case, they would probably have been removed from office, White said. However White said he favored the way that The Battalion editors handled the Clark story.

Postpone Devison

Doyle Lowery moved that the group postpone its decision and get first hand advice from Bing. His motion voiced the opinion of others who wanted to study the matter more.

S. A. Kerley of the Basic Division and group member, was confused on how to vote for White who had left the meeting early. White had asked Kerley to vote for him. He said White had wanted his vote cast in favor of the eight point plan.
